That's the question on the minds of residents and local officials since the MBTA took its offer to build a $40 million tunnel under historic Hingham Square — to mitigate impacts of the Greenbush Line — off the table last week.

Hingham selectmen and MBTA officials were unable to hammer out a mutual agreement in a meeting held in executive session at Hingham Town Hall until just past midnight Wednesday, March 1.

The MBTA had imposed the March 1 deadline for the town to drop its lawsuit in exchange for the 800-foot tunnel.

"We are not still negotiating over the tunnel," said Jon Carlisle, spokesman for the state transportation office. "Our commitment to Greenbush is as strong as ever, it's only going to be $40 million cheaper."

Restoration of the controversial Greenbush Line, which has faced strong opposition from Hingham largely due to its impact on its Lincoln National Register Historic District that includes Hingham Square, would be the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad project. The Middleboro and Plymouth lines started service in September 1997.

"We're always open to talking with the MBTA. They broke off the discussions, we didn't. The tunnel may be off the table in their minds, but not in ours."

— Hingham selectman Martin Crane

In 1996, Hingham launched a lawsuit to ensure the Greenbush project would be subject to federal environmental review with the hope the MBTA would look at alternatives to at-grade rail through Hingham. The MBTA's offer of the tunnel last month appeared to be a turning point that brought Hingham selectmen to the negotiating table.

But Hingham selectmen chairman Michael Holden said the two sides still had several outstanding issues that could not be resolved in time. In a Feb. 25 letter to state transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, who is also MBTA chairman, selectmen asked that the deadline be extended to March 15 but Sullivan refused.

Nevertheless every effort was made to iron out those differences last Wednesday night. But, according to Holden, issues that Hingham differed with the MBTA on when the meeting adjourned at 12:15 a.m. Thursday included: the amount of money for mitigation impacts to the hundreds of Hingham homes along the tracks that would not be protected by the tunnel; that ratification of any agreement be contingent on a ballot vote at the April 29 Hingham town election; and how enforcement of an agreement would be handled.

Holden said selectmen thought the MBTA would agree to meet again Thursday (March 2) but that was not

School facilities committee schedule

The school facilities committee will meet on the following dates before the March 25 town meeting:

Sat. March 11, 10 a.m. at the high school library

Wed. March 15, 7 p.m. at Town Hall

Mon. March 20, 7 p.m. at Town Hall

Tue. March 21, 7:30 p.m. at high school auditorium

Wed. March 22, 7 p.m. at Town Hall

All school facilities meetings are open to the public.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Private custodial bids rejected

The school committee voted last Thursday to reject the three bids received from private cleaning companies to perform school custodial services and to re-bid custodial services for the Osgood school only.

School superintendent Edward Malvey said it didn't make sense to hire a private cleaning company for Deer Hill and the middle-high school when the schools may be renovated in the upcoming years. A $41 million renovation project of both schools is on the warrant for the March 25 town meeting.

"Things will change drastically if this project happens," Malvey said. "Is this the time to make the change? I think not. It's not worth the effort of bringing in a private cleaning company when there's going to be debris in these buildings."

Malvey said a custodial Request for Proposals would be re-bid for the Osgood school in one or two months.

In conjunction with the vote to reject the custodial bids, the school committee formally voted to transfer maintenance of all three schools to the town. The school committee voted to transfer its maintenance budget of $105,000 to the town, along with two custodial positions.

The transferred custodians will become employees of the town DPW.

"By doing this, we attain our goal of transferring maintenance to the town," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "I do think the town will need some more money at some point to perform the maintenance."

Open space needs members

The Open Space Committee is looking for new members to update Cohasset's "Open Space and Recreation Plan." This plan, required by the state, serves as a guide in developing open space and recreation opportunities for Cohasset. Committee members can also become involved in the implementation of the plan. For more information, call Debbie Cook at 383-6313.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Cohasset Plaza expansion town meeting article in jeopardy

Planning board must first give okay

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A local developer's plan to expand Cohasset Plaza may not make it to the March 25 town meeting floor.

Donald Staszko hopes for a 50,000 square foot expansion of the site, which is to consist of an addition at Super Stop & Shop and a 30,000 square foot retail store in between Super Stop & Shop and the block of stores which includes the Shoe Market and Blockbuster Video.

To accomplish the plaza expansion, Staszko would need the highway business district on Route 3A increased by 200 feet. Selectmen proposed the 200-foot expansion of the highway business district at last year's town meeting, but the article was defeated by a vote of 61-49.

A citizen's petition article has been submitted for this year's town meeting to expand the 3A highway business district by the same 200 feet, but a state law may keep the article from being voted upon.

"There's a state law which says a zoning article which is defeated cannot be brought back for two years unless the planning board recommends it," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I don't know the reasoning behind the law. It's probably just something someone at the state level decided was a good idea."

Last year, the planning board voted unanimously to oppose the article, despite the recommendations of the selectmen, advisory committee, and capital budget committee.

The planning board will take up the issue at its Mar. 22 meeting. Planning board chairman Al Moore said he doesn't expect the minds of planning board members to change on the issue.

"The board is constituted the same way it was last year," Moore said. "I certainly don't think the board would recommend the article just so it could be on the warrant."

Staszko said the town should be able to vote on the merits of the article.

"The planning board has the ability to put the article back on the warrant," Staszko said. "I think it would be a pretty sad state of affairs if the town couldn't decide for themselves."

Moore, who spoke against the article at last year's town meeting, said the highway-business district should not further encroach on the residential area behind Cohasset Plaza.

"Someone might say 'Oh, this little thing won't hurt,' but where do you draw the line?" he said. "I don't think the town needs anymore commercially zoned land. No one really wants to live on the border of a commercial zone. There's a buffer there that should be maintained."

Selectmen have recommended the expansion of the highway-business district, as they did last year. Chairman Merle Brown said the town needs more businesses relieve some of the tax burden from homeowners. Commercial taxes account for only 7 percent of the town's tax revenue.

"I believe we need a greater commercial tax base in this town," Brown said. "This could increase tax revenues and make a big difference for homeowners. I also think Don's done a great job with that plaza and made it nice. I don't see the problem with it."

"The planning board has the ability to put the article back on the warrant. I think it would be a pretty sad state of affairs if the town couldn't decide for themselves."
Developer Donald Staszko

Staszko said the proposed new building at Cohasset Plaza could generate as much as $100,000 in taxes for the town.

"There's such limited commercial land in Cohasset," Staszko said. "The $100,000 in tax revenues could pay for new teachers, a policeman, a fireman. This goes right to the bottom line. The town needs the revenue."

Should the planning board choose not to recommend the article at its March 22 meeting, voters will not have a chance to decide if they want an expanded Cohasset Plaza.

In explaining his opposition to expanding the highway business district to accommodate the larger shopping center, Moore said zoning should have a certain permanence.

"This isn't some personal thing with Don Staszko," Moore said. "We've just as adamantly gone the other way with the citizen group who wanted to re-zone Paul Barry's land. People deserve to be able to do to sleep at night without worrying if we're going to re-zone their neighborhoods."

AROUND TOWN

A VERY SPECIAL LADY

This is one of the hardest items that I have ever had to write about! As most of you know, we lost our precious Mimi (Clark's mother) last week — if I may, I would like to tell you just a bit about Mimi!

She was the kindest, nicest person to ever touch our lives! She always had a smile and a laugh; it was so contagious that you would laugh (even though you did not always know why you were laughing!). Mimi had more love to give than anyone and she certainly shared it! Her children, grandchildren, her great grandchildren all certainly benefited from that! She had so many friends that you cannot count them!

Every holiday, Mimi made fudge for all of the people she cared for, wrapped it up with a pretty ribbon and delivered it personally.

She loved to chat with all whom she met — she would tell us she would be back in 10 minutes and return three hours later!

Most of all was her family — whenever we called, she ran! She made pancakes for our grandchildren all the time, even had the courage to sleep with our granddaughter. Tori would sleep with her every time she came over!

I could go on and on, but I think you get the picture: she was the BEST!

Oh, Mimi, the whole town (especially us) will miss you soooo much!

CONGO CAPERS

Good news for you now — the Second Congregational Church is holding another "Congo Capers," entitled "Congo Capers 2000." It will be a Broadway Musical Revue held on Friday, May 5, and Saturday, May 6, at the Cohasset High School Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Tickets are on sale now by calling 383-0345 and the cost of the donation is $10. Jo Fichtner is the "chief," she will be directing/choreographing the show (that means you know it will be wonderful) and Ellen Brown will be the musical director.

So, buy early — the tickets always go so fast that many are left out!

EARLY ACCEPTANCE

Hat's off to Charles Dean, Jr., a senior at St. Sebastian's School in Needham, who was recently offered admission to the class of 2004 at Roanoke College under its early decision program. A four-year member of the varsity tennis team, Charles is active in the International Club. He is the son of Charles and Patricia Dean of Jerusalem Road.

Charles Dean Jr. was recently offered admission to the Class of 2004 at Roanoke College under its early decision program.

CAROUSEL AT FLOWER SHOW

Speaking of events, don't forget that the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will be entering the New England Spring Flower Show once again this year — they will be presenting "Carousel," based on the Rodgers Hammerstein Musical and will be entered Thursday, March 16. You have got to go and see the still life entry (the Carousel Antiques even loaned them a carousel horse to round out the perfect picture).

The club always does such a wonderful job, be sure that you don't miss it!

BELATED BIRTHDAY WISHES

We want to send happy belated birthday greetings to Marge and Malcolm Wilder, they had birthdays last week within days of each other! Hope your special days were happy ones and that you continue with your good way of living life forever!

OLD FRIENDS

Hope that you saw Kit and Sue Megathlin when they were here last week — Cohasset natives who made the treck from Maine to join us. They were very happy to revisit our wonderful town!

ON STAGE

"Arsenic and Old Lace" is coming back — the Cohasset Dramatic Club is performing this great play at the Town Hall March 10, 11, 17, 18, 24 and 25 at 8 p.m. and March 26 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 each and can be bought at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham or Front Street Book Store in Scituate or by phone at 834-0935.

WELCOME!

Welcome to Cohasset, Craig and Kim Mulcahy! They recently bought a home here, and we are ever-so- happy to have them! By the way, Craig is very happy to be back! As is his grandmother, Kay, who really looks forward to seeing him!

RELAY FOR LIFE

Don't forget, get your running shoes ready so that you can participate in the "Relay For Life" June 9 and 10; pack your tent, your good food and your best hopes and be there for an unforgettable event! I promise you, you will be glad that your efforts will pay off!

If this Around Town seems a bit short this week, it is because of our loss — I am sure that you all have news, but did not want to call during this sad time. I hope that you will call this week with your latest news, as I have said before that is what everyone wants to read!

Please give me a buzz at 383-0560. Thanks!

Tunnel talks

Like Humpty Dumpty who had a great fall — train tunnel talks broke apart last week when Hingham officials couldn't meet the MBTA's arbitrary deadline to drop its federal lawsuit or else. The "or else" was the risk of losing a tunnel under Hingham Square that would protect the downtown area from the potential negative effects of the railroad.

The MBTA floated the real possibility of a tunnel just a few months ago when its consultant estimated the price tag would be about $30 million to $40 million — far less than initially estimated — and keeping the entire cost of Greenbush within the $400 million cap imposed by the governor.

Suddenly the tunnel seemed both prudent and feasible and represented a real breakthrough in terms of eliminating the "Hingham problem" that the controversial railroad project has faced for more than a decade.

But while "tunnel or lawsuit" makes a good sound bite — it's a lot more complicated than that.

Both sides have concerns that make sense. The MBTA has offered Hingham an unprecedented $40 million mitigation measure, that sets Hingham apart from any other town along the line. And Hingham officials want to make sure they get the best deal for those homes and businesses along the right-of-way that wouldn't be protected by the tunnel. With its hundreds of antique homes, the right-of-way through Hingham includes two federally protected historic resources — the Lincoln National Register Historic District and the Fort Hill District that is eligible for listing on the National Register.

But what doesn't make sense is why the MBTA — which drew a line in the sand with its all-or-nothing March 1 deadline — pulled the plug on the tunnel talks when there was still room to negotiate.

Hingham selectmen asked for a two-week extension that was refused. After 15 years of Greenbush plans, what possible difference could 14 days make?

And as state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, pointed out to the Journal — this process should not involve threats.

"I'm concerned by the tone reported in the media," the senator said. "It is inappropriate to threaten a town in the first place.

"The town's representatives are doing the best they can for their town as it relates to mitigation and that's no different than any other town, only the issues that face Hingham have far greater magnitude in terms of historical impacts, grade crossings and the environment."

Hingham officials say killing the tunnel option may not strictly be the MBTA's call.

In fact, ultimately a tunnel may be required to protect the town's historic square through Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act which is now being reviewed by the Army Corps of Engineers and federal and state historical agencies. Then there's the federal lawsuit, which was launched by Hingham in 1996 and is still pending, to ensure the restoration of the train is subject to federal environmental laws.

You'll recall that all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put Humpty together again. But unfortunately at this point putting tunnel talks back together may also be impossible in light of recent events that have engendered a lack of trust on both sides.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Old Osgood uses

MARK HADDAD,
TOWN MANAGER

This letter is in regards to an article in the newspaper this week relating to the need for the Police and Fire Department to gain more room, and to comments from Mrs. Towle on behalf of the Trustees of the library.

Let me say at the outset that I am in favor of the library moving to the old Osgood School.

The Study Committee has apparently decided that the best move would be to have the police department move into the large wing, and the fire department take over the existing building. In talking with Chief Noonan, he informed me that space would be perfect for his department. And that area is not currently in the library's plans.

How can the Trustees make the statement that the two uses would not be compatible? There is more than enough parking there. I would invite everybody to go to the town offices in Hingham. That was an old school that was converted to house the town offices as well as the police department. As the Trustees are being given this building, I think in the spirit of cooperation they should consider the needs of the town. There is certainly no question that the police department needs the space.

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

This is to our friends and Mimi's friends throughout the community.

This has been a very sad and difficult week for our families. As many of you know our Mimi passed away suddenly.

We needed you so much and you were all there with your smiles, hugs, phone calls, dinners, flowers, cards, and most of all your Mimi stories.

Thank you so much.

Vote for schools

TO THE EDITOR:

We have an opportunity this spring to vote to bring back excellence to our school facilities. We have excellent students who have achieved the highest MCAS scored on the South Shore, we have an excellent faculty who have taught them well, and now we need once again to have excellent facilities for them.

As a citizen of this town, it's the most important job we have — seeing that our youth are well educated. It takes good facilities and we need to provide them. I urge you to support and vote for the recommendation of the School Facilities Committee this spring. We owe it to our kids, our grandkids and our great-grandkids.

Impact of blasting concerns St. Stephen's

Work part of sewer project

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church is home to beautiful stained-glass windows which give parishioners a sense of pride in their home of worship. The Rev. Cliff Cutler, Rector of St. Stephen's, wants to ensure the windows stay that way.

Cutler is concerned about the impact of rock blasting near the church, which is planned as part of the town's sewer project.

"Some rock ledge will have to be removed within 20 feet of the church," Cutler said. "I'm concerned about the impact which could be done to the stained glass."

Cutler said he is expecting to meet with the sewer commission and engineers working on the project to discuss ways to minimize the risk for damage at St. Stephen's. He said he supports the sewer project but wants to ensure no damage is done to church property.

"I'm very appreciative of the sewer work that's going on and the work of the sewer commission," Cutler said. "I expect that the work will go well. But I'm trained in the Bible, not in the physics of blasting rock."

St. Stephen's will have its own monitors present when the rock blasting occurs, according to Cutler.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said every effort will be made to mitigate potential damage to the St. Stephen's property.

"We're aware of their concerns and are trying to work with them in any way we can," Haddad said.

Because St. Stephen's sits atop live rock, Cutler said he and congregation member are always cautious when blasting is done near the property.

"We're concerned whenever blasting occurs," he said. "We were concerned a couple of years ago with the parish revitalization project as well, when the sidewalk in front of the church was widened."

Answers to Mariner PAYT questions

I would like to respond to the answers to the question asked in the Mariner Feb. 17: "What do you think about Pay-as-you-Throw?"

LOCAL VIEW

MERLE BROWN

"Getting rid of trash should be free."

It would be great if we could dispose of our trash free. Unfortunately, it is not as simple as it once was by throwing it into a deep hole and it seemed it just disappeared. The disposal of trash is one of the most costly expenses that towns and cities have these days. I think Allan MacDonald said it best in his editorial on the "Save as you Throw (SAYT)" system in the Feb. 24 Mariner: "It seems so natural, so fair, so right. Each of us pays only for as much as we use, for as little as we use."

"How do you count the bags? When you have kids, you have a lot of garbage."

If we were to go to a PAYT system, we would offer two size bags, a 30-gallon bag for $1 a bag, and a 15-gallon bag for 50 cents. To dispose of larger items, such as a child's swimming pool, we would sell stickers, which would be affixed to the item, probably at 50 cents a sticker. There would not be any charge for recyclable items. Most of what is sold, and we buy, is recyclable. When you compost vegetable waste, leaves, and grass clipping, your efforts will be rewarded with "black gold," an excellent material for growing gardens, flowers or vegetables. We sell composting bins at the RTF for $25.

"It seems like another cost for older people. I only have one little bag a week. I'd like to see how it's working in other towns."

The nice part about the PAYT is, it is less expensive for the older people. First, the price for a sticker would be drastically reduced because people who throw a small amount away would not be paying the same as those who throw away more. Secondly, people will buy differently and recycle more, therefore throwing less trash away. Our neighbor, Scituate, has been with the PAYT system for more than six months now and has seen a dramatic increase in recycling. Needham, from July to April FY98, prior to PAYT, recycled 154 tons of cardboard; from July to April FY99, after PAYT, recycled 301 tons of cardboard, a 95 percent increase. This is just one recyclable category in Needham, all their recyclable items showed large increases. Merimack went from 19 percent recycling to 37 percent in their first year. All towns that have participated have increased their recycling with the PAYT system.

"I'd have to hang on to a bag until it's full. I usually just throw away one to two small bags at a time." As mentioned above, we will be offering two size bags, a 30-gallon, which fits in a standard trash can and a small 15-gallon bag, for those who do not have as much trash.

"I think it's a good idea to get people to recycle more, but I'd need to see how they're going to distribute the bags and what the cost would be. I can't imagine paying any more in taxes for trash disposal. Also, I'd like to see the town give us recycling bins. Make it easy on us to recycle."

We would have the bags available in many of the stores in town plus at the RTF and DPW during operating hours. As mentioned above, the bags would sell for $1/bag or $10 for a container of 10 for the 30-gallon bags and 50 cents/bag or $5 for a container of 10 bags for the 15-gallon bags. We could try to get recycling bins through a state grant, but generally they give those grants to curb side pick up towns. If the town were to buy them, it would have an affect on our tax bill.

The recycling committee wishes to thank the Mariner for giving people the opportunity to express their concerns. We, as a committee, have spent many hours trying to keep down the cost of removing your trash, we hope the people of the town will support the" Pay-as-you-Throw" system. We believe it is the fairest and best solution.

Merle Brown is a member of the board of selectman and recycling committee.

The year of the apology

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The year 2000 may go down as the year of the apology.

Apologies for everything from naughty language to heinous crimes have been flying through the air like baseballs lately.

That's an apt description because the latest apology was issued from a spring training camp in Florida by a relief pitcher for the Atlanta Braves who couldn't keep his mouth shut during the off season.

John Rocker's "crime" was telling a Sports Illustrated reporter exactly how he felt about the great city of New York and SI's "crime" was printing it.

"The biggest thing I don't like about New York are the foreigners," Rocker was quoted as saying. "You can walk an entire block in Times Square and not hear anybody speaking English.

Apologies for everything from naughty language to heinous crimes have been flying through the air like baseballs lately.

"Asians and Koreans and Vietnamese and Indians and Russians and Spanish people and everything up there. How the hell did they get in this country.

"It's the most hectic, nerve-racking city. Imagine having to take the 7 train to the ballpark, looking like Beirut, next to some kid with purple hair next to some queer with AIDS right next to some dude who just got out of jail for the fourth time right next to some 20-year-old mom with four kids. It's depressing."

After a whole forest of trees had been sacrificed to provide newsprint for comment on Rocker's faux pas, the "criminal" came forth with an apology.

"I used foul language and I owe an apology to the children and families that see baseball players as role models," he said. "I have been a poor example.

"My comments concerning persons afflicted with AIDS, as well as various minority groups, have left people wondering if I am a racist. I will emphasize that I am not a racist.

"I am extremely sorry for the stress and confusion I have brought on the Braves' organization."

At the same time, George Bush, the presidential candidate, on the eve of New York's primary election, was apologizing to John Cardinal O'Connor (and his 2.4 million Catholics) for speaking at Bob Jones University, where the Catholic Church is held to be "a Satanic cult."

"On reflection," said Bush in a letter to the Cardinal, "I should have been more clear in disassociating myself from anti-Catholic sentiments. It was a missed opportunity causing needless offense, which I deeply regret."

Meanwhile, Tom English, who owns a bar in darkest Southie, was called upon to apologize for decorating Tom's English Cottage in a jungle theme, complete with monkeys and natives in a "tribute" to Black History Month.

"That was not the intent at all," said English. "I'm sorry that misconception got out there." It was intended to make barflies feel "warm in the middle of winter," he said.

The EF Au Pair organization finally apologized to Deborah and Sunil Eappen three years later for what their girl, Louise Woodward, did to their 8-month-old son, the late Matthew Eappen.

Assad Shaftari, commander of the Christian forces during a 15-year Lebanese civil war, issued an apology for his contribution to the 70,000 deaths in that fighting.

"I apologize for the horror of war and what I did in this civil war in the name of 'Lebanon' or 'the cause' or 'Christianity.'" he wrote to a Beirut newspaper. "It is something I have wanted to do for sometime."

Now if Sitting Bull's people would only apologize for the unkind things they did to poor George and his boys at the Little Big Horn we'll have come a full circle.

LIBRARY CORNER

Library project

Thanks to the backing of the Cohasset Selectmen, town manager Mark Haddad and town accountant Mike Buckley, the financial plan for the new town library at the old Osgood School is moving ahead. Selectmen endorsed the plan, presented by Trustees, Patience Towle and Shelia Evans, in a majority vote with one dissenting vote. The next step is for town meeting on March 25 to approve the conversion of the old Osgood School into the new town library .

At this time, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees, Friends of the Library and all the library staff would like to express their appreciation for the tremendous support received "town-wide" for the new library project.

Afternoon programs

A series of Sunday afternoon programs for children aged 3 and 4 is being planned for in April. These will include live performances by a storyteller and a musician, thanks to a grant from the Community Partnership for Children, a local organization which has received funding by the Mass. Dept. of Education. Times will be announced soon.

Children's Librarian Suzanne Terry is already beginning to plan an exciting Summer Reading Program to keep Cohasset's children reading all summer long. This year's theme "Open Books, Open Frontiers," produced by the Massachusetts Regional Library System for the use of Children's Librarians throughout the state, promises enough variety to please everyone.

New and interesting books available

Several new books have arrived at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. In fiction, "Girl with a Pearl Earring," by Tracy Chevalier tells an elegant and intriguing story of how a young peasant girl came to have her portrait painted by the famous artist, Vermeer.

If non-fiction is your reading pleasure, there are many new titles available. Joseph Amato has written "Dust: A History of the Small and the Invisible." Amato, whose love of language matches his delight in this provocative subject, maps our relationship with dust and the microcosm. "The Friendly Jane Austen: A Well-Mannered Introduction to a Lady of Sense and Sensibility," by Natalie Tyler, is a guide to all things Jane, full of fun facts and interesting details of Austen's world. And finally, "The Ice Finders: How a Poet, a Professor, and a Politician Discovered the Ice Age," by Edmund Bolles, a science historian, has produced a massively researched and ravishingly written page-turner. This book could well become a classic in its field.

There are many more selections, so come in and "Check" one out at the library.

Democratic primary were much closer. In Hingham, Bradley won by only 56 votes, receiving 1,041 votes to Gore's 985 votes. Bradley's margin of victory was also slim in Cohasset, as he received 390 votes to Gore's 339.

On the Republican side, Cohasset and Hingham voters were indicative of the state as a whole, as McCain defeated Bush in the Mass. state primary, getting 65 percent of the vote. Bush received 32 percent.

The local support of Bradley, however, is something of an anomaly. In the state primary, Gore easily outdistanced Bradley, garnering 60 percent of the vote compared to Bradley's 37 percent.

Dorothy Keville of Cohasset coordinated her town's campaign for Bradley. She said many people she talked to simply thought Bradley was the best Democratic candidate.

"A lot of the people I talked to didn't think Bradley would win the primary, but they just liked him the best," Keville said. "People said they thought he would bring integrity back to the White House. I'm so pleased he won in Cohasset and Hingham."

The excitement surrounding this year's presidential races caused a dramatic increase in local voter turnout.

In Hingham, 5,344 of the town's 14,884 registered voters cast ballots, which Town Clerk Eileen McCracken said was a good turnout. The Hingham turnout of 36 percent is nearly twice the 19 percent of registered voters which cast ballots in the 1996 presidential primary.

Cohasset Town Clerk Marion Douglas said 2,048 of the town's 5,341 registered voters took part in Tuesday's primary, for a voter turnout of 38 percent. In 1996, only 21 percent of Cohasset's registered voters ventured to the polls.

"It was an excellent turnout," Douglas said Wednesday morning. "Thirty-eight percent is great."

Overall, the election went very smoothly in both Hingham and Cohasset. Polls experienced a rush both before and after the workday, but voters generally were able to cast their ballots quickly and efficiently throughout the day.

Due to on-going construction at the high school, Hingham voters cast their ballots at either the former East School or Hingham Middle School, depending on their precinct.

Voters seemed pleased with the fact that there were two poll locations, which alleviated the kind of congestion which occurred during the 1998 state election when all voters cast ballots at the middle school.

McCracken visited both election sites during the day.

"There didn't seem to be a high excitement level, probably because all the precincts weren't together," she said. "Basically, people were doing their duty."

While some voters showed up at the wrong poll, most residents seemed pleased about the set-up.

"There were no traffic problems that I heard of," McCracken said.

At 7:30 a.m. at the middle school, the voter rush wasn't yet in full force. At East School, business was more brisk, with some voters driving around the traffic circle a few times in search of a parking space.

By 8 a.m., election worker Virginia Gray was expecting an increased turnout after witnessing the high volume of voters coming to the polls at the East School.

"We've been having 1 voter every 30 seconds," she said. "There's always a good turnout at presidential elections. Voter apathy appears to be on the wane."

Town Hall was the only polling place open in Cohasset, and Douglas said it became extremely busy during the evening hours.

"We had quite a rush right around supper time," Douglas said. "From about 5 p.m. to 7 p.m., we were really busy. The morning was pretty steady as well. Only the afternoon was slow."

In Cohasset, Mary Ann McKenna, a Republican candidate for state representative, met voters in preparation for the September primary for state representative..

"Cohasset is a real Republican stronghold," McKenna said. "I wanted to meet some of the voters and get some name recognition."

It was a family affair in Hingham, with two family members of political contenders holding signs for their siblings.

Rick Holden was holding a sign for his brother, current selectman chairman Michael Holden, who is running for state representative on the Democratic side.

"This is an exciting election season, with people jumping parties to vote for who they feel is the best candidate," he noted. "This shows the whole system is working. I'm surprised at such a good turnout."

With respect to the state representative race, Holden is pleased that so many people seem to have an interest.

"It should be a good competition," he said. "There are strong opinions on the issues on both the local and national side."

Kristen Bradley, the sister of Garrett Bradley, a Democrat who is facing Holden in the state representative race, had been holding signs for her brother since before 7 a.m.

"This is going to be a busy election season," she said, although Bradley would have liked to see more people holding signs for their candidates overall.

As far as the state representative race is concerned, she's looking forward to the months ahead.

"It's always good to have competition," she said.

Holden plans rally

On Friday, March 10, Mike Holden will announce his candidacy for the state representative seat to be vacated by state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset). Murray announced in January that she would not seek re-election. Holden's announcement will be held at South Shore Country Club in Hingham at 7:30 p.m. and begin a weekend kick-off for his campaign. Holden will greet voters in the towns of Cohasset, Hull and Hingham, which make up the third Plymouth District.

Holden, who currently serves as the chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen, said his decision to enter the race is based on a strong commitment to improve state funding of education, provide access to quality healthcare and implement responsible tax relief measures.

The date of the primary for state representative is Sept. 19.

Candidates debate tonight on cable TV

Selectman candidates, Robert H. Sturdy and Leland Jenkins, will debate the issues on Cohasset Talks, hosted by Wigmore Pierson and Nan Roth, at 8 p.m. tonight on cable-TV channel 3.. Reached by telephone, candidate Michael H. Sullivan said he has another commitment and may not be able to appear.

HEALTH NOTES

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen: What's your stand on the $40 million school project?

SELECTMAN/ Michael Sullivan

I support the $40 million school renovation project. The Deer Hill and middle-high schools were built in the 1950s and are in desperate need of renovation.

The infrastructure of both buildings including heating, ventilation, electrical, plumbing and fire safety are outdated and need to be brought up to code and updated to support the current needs of the school system.

Enrollment projections coupled with curriculum needs require additional space at both schools. There are currently teachers working out of old closets and some programs are forced to take place in hallways. If we were to maintain our current system the town would be required to house some students in modular classrooms within the next few years. Under current state standards, the Deer Hill gym and middle-high school library are undersized for the number of students in the system. These current conditions and other physical code issues could adversely affect our accreditation when we are reviewed within the next three years.

There are areas in the high school that have reached the level of embarrassment. There seems to be more grass on the roof than of some of the fields and the locker rooms are repugnant to even the grubbiest of football players. Some of this is related to the age of the school, but another factor is the lack of general cleanliness and maintenance. Changing history can't occur, but if elected selectman, I will commit to promoting a system that will ensure that we as at own properly maintain and clean our buildings.

SELECTMAN/ Leland H. Jenkins

I solidly support the maintenance and repair of our school buildings. I do not support the $41 million plan that moves the third grade out of the new Osgood School.

Our children's education is so important to me, that I am offering an alternative to the school expansion plans. In my opinion, concentrating on building new and additional sports facilities while leaving the existing classroom sizes below state guidelines does nothing to improve education. I also consider the relocation of the sixth grade to the high school is not in the best interests of our children.

The warrant article I inserted for Town Meeting calls for improvements of our buildings in a systematic and logical manner. My plan doesn't burden the taxpayers with long range loans, high amounts of interest or $2.4 million architectural fees. My plan responds to the quickly changing needs of education, technology and population, brings our buildings to ADA compliance and leaves money for the basics of education — materials and supplies.

Back in '96 the schools told us the state wouldn't reimburse wood frame buildings – but that changed. Now the state is changing the building assistance program again to make it easier for towns like Cohasset to receive renovation reimbursements.

At the December STM, the people demanded a real choice of plans be presented in March. I am the only candidate for selectman who has worked out an alternative plan that clearly illustrates my commitment to being proactive and giving the electorate the real choice.

SELECTMAN/ Robert H. Sturdy

I believe that investment in education is one of the top priorities for the town. Two of my children graduated from Cohasset High School and I currently have grandchildren in the Cohasset schools. But as with every expenditure, there must be adequate value for the money expended. The $41,800,000 School Building Article is the result of a flawed process, and as such, I do not support it. The architect, who was hired, worked with the school administration to produce a facilities "need" document. This document was used as the basis on which plans were produced with a resultant $41,800,000 cost. The town cannot afford to support this "wish list" expenditure.

I support ongoing repairs, renovations, and expansion when needed. The town is fortunate to have substantial educational, architectural, construction and management resources. It's important before embarking on any major school expenditure to enlist the help and participation of these resources to evaluate needs vs. wishes, and to provide full value for the cost.

School facilities are a necessity, but these new facilities will not improve MCAS or College Board scores. I would support additional expenditures for programs such as:

1. Longer class periods and longer school days, so that parts of the curriculum are not eliminated to "get through" by the end of the year.
2. Elimination of the practice of canceling afternoon classes for Early Release Days.
3. Extra-remedial help, so that every student achieves his or her full potential.
4. An effective Substance Abuse Program.

Library trustee: At the new Hingham Town Hall, the town offices shared the same building with the senior center, school department, police station and recreation center. If the library project at the old Osgood School goes forward — what other uses at the site would be compatible with the library?

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Lance Norris

A public library could share space with almost any other public building. Ideally, it would be a recreation center that could provide the basketball and indoor soccer programs some sorely needed space, another outdoor field and preserve and maintain the great play park currently on the property.

The big question in Cohasset is whether or not a police station and a library would be compatible. I have not yet heard any compelling arguments on why the two could not share space at the old Osgood. In the interest of parking; both the library and the police station's plans would have to be revisited, but I would think a competent architect could easily solve that problem, and maybe even figure out a way to save the play park as well.

Here's an idea: what if the overnight guests of the Cohasset police department were given bright orange jumpsuits and put to work cleaning the library after hours? Of course the Cohasset police department doesn't do enough volume to make that plan work, but that only underscores why they would make a compatible building mate.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Agnes McCann

If the library plans for the former Osgood school are approved by the town, as I sincerely hope they are, then it will be up to the town to decide what other uses may fit the building.

Those associated with learning, culture, art, music, film, history, language and community would certainly head my list.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Patience Towle

When the members of the board of selectmen make their decision regarding the unused portion of the old Osgood School, including the memorial garden, the ship playground, the basketball court, the playing field and extra parking spaces, I hope they will be able to chose a harmonious blend of the educational and recreational.

As a library trustee, I would encourage and support a blend that would be sensitive to the residential nature of the existing neighborhood and one that would not have a negative impact on the town's $1,450,000 application for library construction grant funding.

Specific choices that could enhance the compliment a public library that is walking distance from two nursery schools, two public schools, the art, community and senior centers might well include a mixture of publicly and privately sponsored facilities for a revitalized playground, sports events, an art gallery and a museum.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Carol Riley

There's no doubt in my mind that when the new Cohasset library project is completed, the old Osgood School will become a focal point in our community, holding wonderful memories for now grown children who spent their early years there. With 25 parking spaces near the front door and the entire library set out on one handicapped accessible floor, young mothers with strollers and seniors who may have difficulty using stairs will truly be at home.

Having served now for two years as a trustee of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and three years on the board of directors of the Friends of the Library, I, as well as my fellow trustees, have visited many other libraries in the Commonwealth to identify the finest examples of efficiency and beauty and apply them to the design of a new library for the 21st century in Cohasset. While it is not in the domain of the trustees to designate other uses for the site, attractive possibilities would be: a preschool or day-care center; a studio or art gallery (perhaps in conjunction with the South Shore Art Center); the Cohasset Historical Society; of course, a teen center would be ideal (if we didn't just get a new one). The existing playground behind the old Osgood School could be improved and landscaped into a beautiful park for children and seniors. Several of these scenarios would bring revenue to the town and all would contribute to the cultural and social enrichment of our community.

Planning board: Town meeting will be asked to support extending the highway business district to set the stage for expansion of Cohasset Plaza. Where do you stand on the issue?

PLANNING BOARD/ Randy Patterson

My position is based on the need for additional business services for Cohasset residents and the improved quality of life it would bring. I believe the town should consider the Purpose and Intent of expanding the Highway District using Zoning Bylaw Section 1.3 Scope and Purpose as a guideline.

Does this expansion promote the health, safety, convenience, and welfare of the inhabitants of Cohasset while at the same time preventing the overcrowding of land, conserving the value of land and buildings and preserving natural resources?

The town should identify what business services are missing and does vacant space exist within the current highway district that could accommodate them before we alter the use of land as suggested. Driving on Route 3A, I notice several commercial vacancies that should considered first. These include the rock pile at the intersection of King Street, store space in Tedeschi Plaza, the old Curtis Liquor Store at the intersection of Brewster Road, and the former Chevrolet Dealership.

It is not clear to me if this requested expansion is the result of a demand from residents for more business services or if it is a developer's thought to build it and they will come. If the town approves the expansion, the planning board should then ensure that the construction plans are consistent with or better than the current plaza landscape.

PLANNING BOARD/ Chris Ford

I am responding from Florida where I am vacationing and have not had an opportunity to review the issue beyond what I have gathered from previous newspaper accounts. Nevertheless, my position at this point is that I am inclined to support the expansion, as proposed, for the following reasons:

The proposed expansion seems to be consistent with the existing development and I do not believe that the incremental increase would have an adverse impact on the neighboring areas;

It appears that the current highway and parking infrastructure along with the proposed additions can adequately handle any increased traffic to the site;

The increase in tax revenue from the new valuation will be very welcome;

I am a strong supporter of conducting one's business in their own community and I appreciate the convenience of being able to shop locally versus having to drive 20 miles;

While I am inclined to support this specific expansion, I do so with some serious reservations. Spending time in Florida makes one very conscious of the blight caused by commercial sprawl that down here seems to go on unchecked forever. The natural beauty of our community is our greatest asset and we must preserve this at all costs. Any effort to expand beyond our existing commercial districts must be put to the most stringent of tests.

School committee: What are the benefits and/or drawbacks to putting school maintenance under the town umbrella?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Chartis Tebbetts

I would hope that by having one maintenance department for Cohasset, efficiencies will be gained. Each maintenance team member can become a specialist in certain areas and be deployed when and where needed. With a single staff responsible for all public buildings, planned maintenance can be scheduled, as well as unforeseen needs met quickly.

It will be important to establish an accountability and communication system, not only to get projects done in a timely fashion, but also to develop realistic budgets.

Maintenance and custodial costs reflect the degree to which we take pride in and hold ourselves accountable for the condition of our public buildings and grounds. If we all commit ourselves to keeping our properties in excellent shape, we will be more successful with the dollars dedicated to maintenance.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Rick Flynn

The immediate benefit to placing school maintenance under the town umbrella would be to guarantee and isolate funds to be spent on maintenance. Due to the budgetary pressures placed on the town and school budgets by Proposition 2 1/2 over many years, difficult decisions had to be made in terms of spending priorities. At times, on the school side, maintenance was sacrificed for the benefit of educational programs. Unfortunately school buildings have suffered from the lack of proper maintenance over the years. The positive side of this situation was that the Cohasset school system continued to put out an above average education.

As we undertake our efforts to renovate both the Deer Hill School and the middle/high school maintenance had become an obvious issue. Now is the time to move maintenance responsibility to the town side. This will insure that funds budgeted for maintenance will be spent on maintenance and we will be able to protect our new school investment.

An added benefit to this new arrangement is that the school department will have to spend less time focusing on maintenance issues and can spend more time on educational matters. Additionally, the suspicion surrounding school maintenance budgets and spending should be put to rest. The town as a whole will now be responsible for school buildings and maintenance issues will be more clearly defined.

Next week's questions

For selectman and planning board candidates: Should the village train station be resurrected? Why or why not?

For school committee candidates: The school committee recently was shocked to learn the SPED deficit is much larger than expected. What's wrong with this picture?

For library trustee: With the Internet bringing the world to the library, the Old Colony Network system and a great library down the road in Hingham, why does little Cohasset need a larger library facility?

Answers must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Responses, which must be no more than 250 words, may be e-mailed to mford@cnc.com, sent by fax to 741-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. For more information, call Mary Ford 741-2933. Candidates, opposed or unopposed are welcome to submit photos and formal announcements of their candidacies The Mariner will also publish a candidates corner which is limited to a few lines from any candidate who wishes to submit dates of coffees, fundraisers and the like. The Mariner would also like to hear from any write-in candidates for open seats on the board of health, recreation commission and housing authority.

Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts has announced her candidacy for one of the two openings on the Cohasset School Committee. She believes that she has valuable experience and perspective to offer the town and the committee, especially as the incumbents have decided to leave the committee. Tebbetts has lived in Cohasset since 1968. Her first involvement with town government came as a member of the Cohasset League of Women Voters. She was a Board member and served one term as League president. She is currently a member of the Hingham League.

In addition to serving on a variety of committees at First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, Tebbetts has been an appointed member of the Cohasset Housing Partnership, the Committee to Study the Structure and Function of Town Government, and the Citizen Sewer Advisory Committee. She has run for office (unsuccessfully) twice before — once in the 1970's for Charter Commission and then again in 1992 for the Democratic nomination for State Senate. You will see her name on the March 7 ballot as a member of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee.

Tebbetts and her first husband, Jack, had 2 sons, Bill and Jamie, both of whom attended Cohasset schools in the 1970's and 1980's. Jack served on the School Committee from 1977-1985. Tebbetts, widowed in 1987, married Ned Tebbetts in 1996. Ned has also served the Town in various ways, including on the Board of Selectmen and the Capital Budget Committee.

Cohasset is faced with a number of challenges which involve the School Committee. The town is reorganizing its educational plan. The buildings themselves must be repaired and expanded to meet new state standards and requirements. Education reform has meant that students, teachers, and districts are accountable for meeting higher performance goals. It has become increasingly obvious that all our citizens deserve and need access to life-long learning opportunities, which the School Committee needs to define and provide for.

In order to meet these various challenges, the citizens of Cohasset face significant financial obligations. For many residents, the increased taxes will come as an inconvenience, but will be acceptable because Cohasset will be able to continue to rank as one of the best school districts in the state for their children to attend. For many other citizens, though, the financial burden becomes heavier and heavier. Tebbetts considers it essential to find a way to make this burden bearable for these neighbors. Incorporating the schools into the daily lives of everyone and keeping them open to all learners will help. Ways must also be found to keep the annual property tax bill at a level which everyone can afford. By using her contacts in the State Legislature, Tebbetts plans to address these concerns, and get results.

Although unopposed in this election, Tebbetts welcomes the campaign as an opportunity to hear the concerns and ideas of the public. She is around town most of the time, and would welcome your calls.

Norris is candidate for library trustee

Local author Lance Norris will be a candidate for one of the three openings on the Library Board of Trustees on the April 8 town election.

Norris first moved to Cohasset in 1974 and believes he has a great deal of experience and vision to offer the town and the board.

"The proposed transformation of the old Osgood school into a new public library, at a minimal cost to the taxpayer, should be the board's first priority," he said. "But with the additional square footage should come a very impelling plan to fill that space with programs that involve and ameliorate the entire community. The board has done a very adequate job in seeing the project this far, but could benefit from a fresh prospective and a new member with a vested interest in making a library that would enrich the lives of the children in this town.

"To make this new library a reality without a Proposition 2 1/2 override will require several nontraditional revenue streams," he said. "It's a very exciting challenge that I am looking forward to. The rehabilitation of Deer Hill and the high school are going to be a big enough hit on the local taxpayer. I'd like to see us get a new library done without going to that well."

A professional writer, Norris has authored two books, is a former contributing editor to "National Lampoon Magazine", and a contributor to publications as diverse as "Entertainment Weekly", "MAD", "Musician Magazine" and the Mariner newspapers.

Norris has written for a number of television programs, including an Emmy nominated season with "Politically Incorrect with Bill Mahr," but is perhaps best known for his 14 years as the head writer of the Charles Laquidara Radio Hour, currently heard on WZLX in Boston.

Norris is president and CEO of Dutchco, a music publishing firm which controls the rights to more than 100 songs with B.M.I.. He also is a member of the Screen Actor's Guild with a long list of television and motion picture credits, and a former member of the S.A.G. Awards nominating committee. A former teacher of English as a second language, Norris was also a visiting lecturer at the Chengdu University of Science and Technology in the People's Republic of China, and a member of Beta Theta Pi.

Norris has a 7-year-old daughter, Savanna, in the Cohasset school system, and a one-year-old son, Ray, with his wife Amy, who is currently working on a children's book.

"Aside from the fact that as a writer I'd like to see a full functioning library in town," he said, "I'd also like to see this turned into a major asset for the children and the community at large".

Kristin Sheerin (back), and Carlie Carter have both had successful individual seasons.

Sheerin takes sixth in state

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Her timing couldn't have been any better. Cohasset/Norwell gymnast Kristin Sheerin turned in the best meet of her young career in the biggest competition she has yet to compete in.

Sheerin grabbed hold of the opportunity, threw the pressure aside, and strutted her talents in front of the beautiful people of Massachusetts's gymnastics. In doing so, Sheerin left no doubt that she is going to be a major factor in state competition come next season.

C/N's top gymnast started strong and only got better in Saturday's State Individual Gymnastics Championships at MIT. Facing the best and deepest field of the season, Sheerin placed a well-deserved sixth in the all-around with a new personal best of 35.4.

The personal best was one of four Sheerin either tied or broke, beginning with the 9.1 she scored on her floor routine. The mark tied her personal best, which is also Cohasset High's school record.

"She's was ecstatic," said Cohasset/Norwell coach Ruthann Ardizzoni of Sheerin's strong showing at the meet. "She's worked real hard for the last year and her hard work really paid off."

The meet was truly an elite competition with gymnasts having to have averaged at least an 8.4 per event during the regular season to qualify.

"Everybody at that meet was an 8.4 and over on every event," said Ardizzoni. "Kristin is really one gymnast who is good under pressure."

With several of her teammates cheering her on, Sheerin set the tone for what turned out to be a true breakthrough evening in her high school career by tying her personal best and school record of 9.1 on the floor exercise.

"That just started her evening off with a bang and got her motivated," said Ardizzoni.

Sheerin's vault score of 8.45 was the second best of her career. Her personal best is 8.5 and she has nailed that mark just once before. She went on to have a career night on the bars with an 8.75.

The score was a new personal best and school record. Without losing a step, Sheerin then broke her own school record on the beam with a sterling score of 9.1. With so many quality scores a new personal best in the all-around was inevitable.

Sheerin finished ahead of Pilgrim Conference champion Gina Verge of Scituate High, who was just outside the top 10 with an 11th-place showing. Her performance emphasized just how important year-round training is if gymnasts hope to compete at a high level.

"She should be very proud of herself because she worked so hard," Ardizzoni said. "It (the meet) was the best of the best."

Another C/N gymnast had quite a meet herself in the Level 8 sectionals at the Spectrum gymnastics studio in Brockton.

Carlie Carter, who along with Sheerin has posted a perfect attendance record in four years on the high school team, also had her best meet to date.

All Carter did was set personal bests on the bars (9.05) and floor (8.7). She also registered solid scores of 8.0 on the balance beam and the vault with a 7.35. Carter's solid meet easily qualified her for the state finals to be held in mid-April.

Ardizzoni said several of the C/N gymnasts would be taking lessons at least once a week during the offseason, which should be a big bonus heading into next year. Ardizzoni predicted Meredith Bixby is on the verge of stepping up to that next level and should have a solid season for C/N next winter.

"You're going to see a big jump from Meredith next year," Ardizzoni said. "She's going to spring out."

Barry proposes landfill solution at Cohasset Heights

ness community for his proposal. He plans to distribute a town-wide mailing explaining how a commercial transfer station could benefit the town.

Chief among those benefits, according to Barry, would be the end of perceived threats from landfilling at Area 5. He said Hingham Lumber, which may move due to its location on the proposed Greenbush commuter rail line, has expressed interest in using part of Area 5 as its new home.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris asked Barry if he would consider a non-waste disposal use at Area 5 in conjunction with Hingham Lumber, rather than a commercial transfer station. Barry said he wanted to stay in the business he has been involved in for over 30 years.

"I've been in the rubbish disposal business since the 1960s," he told McMorris. "It's what I know."

Barry said the town could benefit from the use of Area 5 by a retailer, such as Hingham Lumber, and from tax revenue generated from a transfer station.

According to assessor Cheryl Pooler, the town received just over $15,000 in tax revenue from CHL in 1999. In 1997, the last time the landfill was operational for a full calendar year, the town received more than $28,000 in taxes from CHL.

To make a transfer station profitable, Barry said the proposed facility would need to process at least 500 tons per day of material. At its height, Barry said CHL handled 299 tons of trash per day.

The increase in tonnage might generate more trucks than used the landfill during its years of operation, Barry said. He told selectmen he didn't have an estimate on the number of trucks which might use the facility each day, but added he would be happy to 'work the numbers' to give selectmen an idea.

John McNabb, a member of the anti-landfill citizen group Stop Any Further Expansion, said a transfer station should not be allowed as part of any agreement to end litigation between the town and CHL.

"There should be no deals," McNabb said. "If CHL thinks it has a good proposal for a transfer station, then it should be decided on its merits and permitted properly."

McNabb has developed a citizen's petition article for the March 25 town meeting which would prohibit a landfill or a transfer station at CHL. The article would change the light industrial zone on 3A, where CHL is located, to a technology business district.

Allowed uses in the technology business district would include biotechnology, technology research, and electronic, and high-tech assembly businesses. Landfills, manufacturing, and residential homes would be prohibited in the district.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Barry's transfer station would most likely not be allowed if the technology business district article were passed at town meeting.

Building commissioner Bob Egan said he is unsure whether the transfer station would be an allowed use in the current light industrial zone.

"A transfer station doesn't really fit into a square peg as far as zoning goes," Egan said. "Then again, a lot of things don't. I wouldn't make that call myself. That's why we have a planning board and zoning board to look at these things."

Will SPED deficits continue?

to have one on the town side to cover things like police overtime," Haddad said. "We just don't have the money to do that."

At last Thursday's school committee meeting, Malvey and director of student services Lynn Silva explained the causes of this year's special education deficit. Silva said special education costs have been harder to control this year than they were in previous years.

"This year has been our toughest," she said. "We've had students coming to us with significant impairments and we've had a good amount of staff training that has occurred. We have to be able to get these kids what they need when they need it. We don't have a choice not to spend the money."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo was concerned about how special education costs have risen almost $160,000 since November, when Silva and Malvey informed them of a $223,000 deficit, $200,000 of which was funded at last December's special town meeting.

Because the school committee was only told of the remaining deficit last month, both town and school officials have had to scramble to fund the deficit.

"Back in November, we knew costs of $223,000," DeGiacomo said. "If we had been able to anticipate some of these additional costs back then, it would be much easier now. In November, you took a snapshot of what you knew, and two weeks ago you gave us another snapshot. We want to try and identify as best we can what happened between those two snapshots."

Silva said she would attempt to give the school committee a breakdown of how costs had changed from November to February by its next meeting.

Malvey said he plans to make a number of changes which may allow increases in special education costs to be less of a surprise in the future.

"I see this as a management responsibility," Malvey said. "We need to manage better, predict better, and budget better. We can do a better job on the internal identifications of our students. Then, I'd like to institute a bi-weekly financial review to determine what impact it has. Then, we'll look at the budget implications. We'll also look at ways to deliver services better. All of these things need to be done, and they need to be done immediately."

Haddad said the changing nature of special education costs makes it difficult for both the school department and the town to stick to their financial plans.

"In December, it's one number, it's another number in January, and it's another number in February," Haddad said of special education costs. "It's such a moving target. I'm sure it frustrates the school committee, because it frustrates me. [Town Accountant] Mike Buckley and I will come up with a plan, everyone goes along with it, and then we have to change it again. It's tough."

School committee member Stephanie Noble said deficits are going to keep happening until the school department budget more accurately reflects special education costs.

"There's been a lot of discussion about special education hanging out there at budget time," Noble said, "but if we can't budget better, it's going to keep hanging out there. The first step is to increase the special education budget."

Haddad said the school committee budget has been increased by $740,000 for FY 2001. $600,000 of that total is to go toward teacher salaries, with the remaining $140,000 to go toward special education. As of now, Haddad also is planning to cover a $241,000 special education deficit until the school year is underway.

"We want to wait until the fall, when we have a better idea of what the costs will be and fully fund it at that time," he said. "Of course, $241,000 is the number today, and it's likely to change. But we increased the school budget for next year, which will hopefully control the deficit."

Former school committee member Maureen Jerz said the biggest problem facing Cohasset officials is the state's unwillingness to contribute a larger percentage of the town's special education costs. She said all of Cohasset's students suffer as a result.

"It's not really fair to anyone when we have these deficits," Jerz said. "It's not fair to the kids in these programs, and it's not fair to other kids who lose athletic programs or other activities. The state needs to fully fund its mandate. The funding piece has to get moving."

Haddad said the state's reluctance to increase special education funding affects the entire town.

"This is a town problem with special education, not just a school problem," he said. "It's severely impacting our ability to budget, and it's impacting the school committee's ability to budget as well."

A possible plan to solve the SPED deficit

Town Accountant Michael Buckley has developed a plan to fund the $180,000 special education deficit without reductions in school department staff and services. Because the deficit affects the current fiscal year, Buckley had to find available money in the current school department or municipal budgets.

The school committee has yet to vote on the plan, which consists of $73,000 in town funds and $107,000 in school department funds.

From the Town budget

$23,000 - Deficit amount left over from special town meeting
$20,000 - Amount in Lillard Field article, which has been removed from warrant
$30,000 - Surplus in debt budget from straits Pond sewer project

$73,000

From the School Department budget

$50,000 - Transfer from athletic budget. Revolving fund to fund athletic expenses for rest of the year
$10,000 - After school fund
$20,000 - Delay or cancel planned maintenance or equipment purchases
$27,000 - Transfer from advisory committee

$107,000

$180,000 - Total

Local officials insist tunnel has a pulse the case. He received a call that morning saying any tunnel deal was off. The MBTA would not return to the table because of its arbitrary March 1 deadline, Holden said.

"It took us 15 years to get here," a clearly angry and frustrated Holden said. "And we're told here it is and we're given two hours to sign it."

"We made a lot of progress into the wee hours only to have someone throw their arms up in the air and say 'this is your last chance,' — that's just not realistic and was not done with a modicum of good faith," he said.

Carlisle said the MBTA saw the differences in the agreement as roadblocks that would delay the project.

"Any delays add to the cost of the project," he said. "This was a turning point and we said 'stop stalling.'

"With the tunnel we offered a mitigation package that was unprecedented," Carlisle said. "We took that step and said, 'Why don't you take a step by March 1 and drop the lawsuit?'"

But despite the breakdown in tunnel talks, the MBTA may not have the final word, Hingham officials said.

According to Hingham Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan and Selectman Martin Crane, a "win" for the town in the lawsuit which is still on the table could result in the MBTA being required to build a tunnel under the square anyway. The lawsuit accuses the MBTA of "segmenting" the Greenbush project from the other two Old Colony Railroad projects that were paid for with federal dollars by using only state funds to pay for it in an attempt to evade strict federal environmental laws — which could require the tunnel.

Last December, the lawsuit was dealt a blow when in a 25-page decision a federal court magistrate sided with the MBTA. But Hingham exercised its right to ask that a federal judge hear the case. Either side could ultimately appeal the judge's ruling.

Furthermore, negotiations with the Army Corps of Engineers — the lead federal agency involved in reviewing the Greenbush proposal — the Massachusetts Historical Commission and the Federal Advisory Board on Historic Preservation are still taking place, which include how to mitigate the train's impact on historic properties. Those discussions are likely to be ongoing until at least June.

"We are currently engaged in consultations with the Corps, which will decide which mitigation measures are appropriate, including the possibility of a tunnel," Macmillan said. "We held bilateral discussions between the T and the town to see if we could go into the (Army Corps of Engineers) process with our own agreement. But because of the artificial (March 1) deadline, we came close but didn't quite get there. It's an on-going process. Whether or not the tunnel is off the table begs the question."

Ultimately the town wants a guaranteed, enforceable document, with everything spelled out in detail.

"We will continue to mitigate aggressively in the best interests of the town should the train line be built," said Crane, "including citizens living in the most affected areas. We're always open to talking with the MBTA. They broke off the discussions, we didn't. The tunnel may be off the table in their minds, but not in ours."

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a vocal opponent of Greenbush, said he doesn't think the tunnel is a dead issue.

"From a mitigation standpoint I can't see the MBTA proceeding without a tunnel if they go ahead," he said. "They will run into so many safety issues. There are so many costs associated with addressing those mitigation issues in the square without a tunnel, such as road configuration and potential land takings."

However, Hedlund doesn't think the tunnel setback will derail the Greenbush project.

"In March 2000 given where the Executive Office of Transportation has placed Greenbush on its capital spending plan," he said, "if I were a betting man, I'd say Greenbush will happen but that's not to say it's a done deal."

Cohasset resident Arthur Roebuck, owner of the British Relief on North Street said that even if a tunnel was to become a reality, most downtown businesses wouldn't survive the long construction stage.

"I've been in the square since 1972, and I love the square, the people and the clientele," he said. "But because of the heavy traffic the square is already losing business. If we lose everything (because of the train), how will we get it back?" Roebuck has counted more than 2,000 cars passing by his restaurant in an hour at peak times.

Ross Hall of High Street, who works in Boston, has supported restoration of the train since 1985.

"The Square won't be the same without a tunnel," he said. "But it's not going o be as bad as it's made out to be.

"It will be different, there will be some crossings closed," Ross said. "And there will be bells and whistles for 30 seconds at a pop — but most of the time nothing will be happening."

Ross, who he will retire in December, looked forward to taking the train to South Station.

"If I could beam in here, I'd be happy," Hall said in an interview from work Tuesday.

But Roebuck, who recalls the days when a train once traveled through the square, said the train is not the answer.

"Yes, the train was there. It was dirty and noisy, but it was a fun train," he said. "Groups of men played cards in the club car and drank coffee, but there were far fewer cars back then. It was a whole different ball game."

Greek Orthodox church plans new community center

Fashion show serves as a fundraiser for building fund

Donna Rumble walks down the runway with Keith Drake at the Barker Tavern during a fashion show fundraiser for the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church in Cohasset.

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church is planning to build a $1.3 million addition to its Jerusalem Road structure, which will house a new community center.

Jim Botsolis, president of the church's Board of Stewards, said additional space is needed for a congregation whose size has outstripped the bounds of the church.

"We have our own parish house next to the church, but it needs a lot of work and isn't large enough to accommodate the congregation," said Botsolis, who estimated 160 families from around the South Shore belong to the church. "We also have 85 kids in Sunday School classes and we don't have a space large enough to house them. We need more room."

Botsolis said work on the plans for the new Panagia Community Center began in earnest last year. Church member Robert Therrian, an architect, has donated his services in drawing up plans for the new center, which he says have been designed to match the natural stone exterior of the current church.

"We wanted to be very sensitive to the current architecture," Therrian said. "One side-wall will be taken down and be reassembled into the addition. When it's finished, it will look as if it's all one original building."

Botsolis said the capital campaign to finance the project has yet to begin, but said the church does have approximately $25,000 toward the cost of the project from the proceeds of last year's Taverna, the church's annual Greek festival. He said the church hopes to get a construction loan for the project and noted all proceeds from this year's Taverna, scheduled for June 23-25, will go into the church's building fund.

While major fund raising has yet to begin, a group of ladies belonging to the congregation raised $5,000 for the building fund with a fashion show last Sunday.

The Philoptochos Society consists of women within the church who raise money for charitable causes. With a building project in the beginning stages, however, the church's building fund was the recipient of the money raised by the society's "Millennium Fashion Show," held Sunday at the Barker Tavern.

Church members modeled fashions from Rodeo South and Natale's of Hanover. Philoptochos Society member Donna Rumble served as one of the models and said she enjoyed taking her first turn on the catwalk.

"I've never done anything like that, modeling with all those people around," Rumble said. "It was a lot of fun. People kept asking me where they could buy the clothes I was wearing. They were certainly nicer than the clothes I usually wear."

The funds raised Sunday will help the church reach the ultimate goal of building its new community center.

"We're just starting small at this point," Botsolis said. "We haven't even begun the major financing which will make the project a reality."

Therrian said the community center will consist of an 8,000 square-foot addition, which will be split between two floors. The first floor, which is slated to be about 4,800 square feet, will contain parish offices and a large function room for weddings and community events.

The second floor will be approximately 3,200 square feet, and will house activity rooms which will be used for Sunday School classes and other instructional activities. In order to preserve the current architecture, Therrian said the second floor will actually be built into the existing roof-line.

When the community center is finished, Botsolis said it will be home to the popular Taverna.

"It's going to be something which is wonderful for our church and will serve the Cohasset community as well," Botsolis said.

Natale's and Rodeo South donated part of their sales through March 12; the Barker Tavern donated a portion of the meal costs for the event; Zona Salon of Norwell donated the hair and nail preparation; Essentials Day Spa of Hingham donated the makeup. The event included a raffle and silent auction for items donated by area businesses; Natale's, Rodeo South, Charlotte's Boutique, Room by Room, Hingham Greenery, Sweet Surprises, Zona Salons, Hingham Jewelers, Laufer Jewelers, You're Invited, and Welch & Co. Warren Gregory, pianist, provided music for the event.

Cohasset kitchen tour set for April 7

It has a little of everything including the kitchen sink. Five unique Cohasset homes, designer fabrics, lush floral arrangements, elegant table settings and tempting taste treats prepared by some of the area's best-loved caterers and it's all for your enjoyment as part of the South Shore Community Center's Fourth Annual Kitchen Tour, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., Friday, April 7.

As individual as their owners, each of this year's five kitchens reflects the vast and varied options available to today's homeowner when planning or decorating a kitchen, as well as the individual style which pervades today's entertaining.

Starting at Cohasset's landmark Lightkeeper's Residence — which serves as both respite spot and tour boutique — the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and village. Tour highlights include a Cohasset Golf Club course-side home, a unique village antique and a Newport cottage-style home with natural-set pool just beyond the kitchen.

Adding to the interest of the architectural details and personal interior design styles of the five homeowners will be the artistry of area design professionals, who will offer up table settings in the kitchens and dining rooms of each home.

And for the tour-goer who is left craving a little something to whet her pallet, each home as well as the Lightkeeper's Residence will feature catered refreshments.

With all homes open throughout the day, this unique tour can be seen on an individualized schedule. Attendees can take part of the tour, say, in the morning and complete the day after lunch.

Advance tickets are $20 through Friday, March 31, and $25 per person beginning Monday, April 3, through the day of the tour. Tickets may be purchased at the Community Center or by calling (781)383-0088. Ticket sales are limited, so advance purchase is suggested.

Funds from Kitchen Tour 2000 will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The center, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, is a non—profit organization founded nearly 60 years ago. It is dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

For more information about the kitchen tour or any of the center's courses, workshops or ongoing programs, call (781) 383-0088.

Holiday dance

Youth Resources Committee will hold a dance for grades 6 through 8 Friday evening, March 17, at the Teen Garage, from 7 to 10 p.m.

Admission is $5 per person at the door and all youngsters in grades 6 through 8 are invited.

Patrick Carbone will DJ this dance.

'Torch Mistress'

The South Shore Art Center's Le Bistro Chantant series of Saturday night performances comes to a rousing conclusion at 8 p.m., March 11, with 'Torch Mistress' Suzy William's performance of songs "with a wicked look at longing."

With accordionist Evan Harlan, Williams will perform tunes by Henry Mancini, Erik Trayhorn, Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Kurt Weill and Langston Hughes as well as original compositions. The performance will also include Film Noir-type numbers (such as "The Heel" and "Ain't That Just Like a Man"), Romanian Gypsy music, Bach, Rimsky-Korsakov and songs sung in French and Italian. L.A. Weekly recommended Williams and her accompanist as "the Cabaret Torch Sizzlers."

Williams' March 11 performance will take place in the bistro setting of the South Shore Art Center. Guests can enjoy the concert while sipping French wine amidst the current exhibition at the Bancroft Gallery.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

SPACE-STRETCHING IDEAS

When space is at a premium for your new bath, consider annexing space from an adjoining closet, hall, or room. Or, perhaps an exterior wall could be bumped out. Otherwise, look to free up existing space by replacing a bulky vanity with a sleeker pedestal sink or increase the efficiency of cabinetry with pullout laundry hampers, tilt-out waste cans, drawer organizers, and appliance garages. Also look to create more storage space by stacking a corner with wedge-shaped glass shelves. A stack of shelves can also be incorporated into the spaces between wall studs. Finally, by replacing traditional hinged doors with pocket doors, you can make use of the floor space formerly reserved for swing clearance.

At the end of a long day, it can be comforting to retreat to a beautiful, spacious bathroom. Are you satisfied with the look of your bathroom? THE DESIGNING WOMAN can take the mystery out of creating beautiful and functional living spaces. We keep current with the latest decorating techniques and share them with clients so that they can consider all their options before making decisions. Our services include creating an individualized design plan and coordinating colors, patterns, and fabrics. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: To visually increase the size of a small bathroom, use such reflective materials as glass and mirrors.

Surf's up for seniors

Elder Affairs offering Internet class

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

High school students aren't the only seniors surfing the Internet. Cohasset Elder Affairs offers an Internet class on Wednesday mornings at the South Shore Community Center, opening up a new world for the town's senior citizens.

"The Internet's great because it allows seniors to research all kinds of places they might want to travel to without leaving Cohasset," said Kathy Bryanton, director of Cohasset Elder Affairs. "They can do all their planning on-line. People are always attracted to the South for retirement, but maybe there's other areas. Seniors can look and say 'This is a place I might want to retire to.'"

The Internet class for seniors is taught by Cohasset resident Mary McElroy, a retired junior high school math and history teacher. McElroy has taught computer classes on programs such as Microsoft Word and Excel in town since the early 1990s, but started teaching the Internet class only two years ago, when the community center's computer equipment was updated.

Though some seniors may feel they don't possess adequate computer skills to begin working on the web, McElroy said the Internet is a wonderful opportunity for novices to begin familiarizing themselves with computers.

"The Internet is a great class so start out with because a lot of it is just point-and-click," McElroy said. "Also, the Internet allows seniors to take the computer and relate it to their own lives."

To illustrate the Internet's usefulness as a research tool, McElroy asks all the seniors in her class to bring in topics they would like to explore on-line. Students have visited news sites, museums, and even researched the latest information about Beanie Babies.

"They can find directions to places, and buy things like food or stamps on-line," McElroy said. "The potential is there for tremendous expansion for seniors."

One of McElroy's students, Judith Chute, uses the skills she has learned from McElroy's Internet class to pursue one of her favorite hobbies.

"I'm interested in historical research and genealogy, so using the Internet fits right in with the things I like to do," Chute said. "Mary asked us what we were interested in and showed us how to get into the different sites."

"The Internet is a great class so start out with because a lot of it is just point-and-click. Also, the Internet allows seniors to take the computer and relate it to their own lives."

Mary McElroy, instructor of senior Internet class

When today's seniors were attending high school and college, the advent of personal computers was still far into the future. Bryanton said a lack of familiarity with today's technology can be a challenge for seniors looking to use the Internet.

"That generation is very well educated, but they're writers who use pen and paper," Bryanton said. "From my perspective, it's wonderful to see grandparents wanting to use e-mail and the Internet to connect with family members and grandchildren in college."

Chute said McElroy's patient manner allows even the least knowledgeable of computer users to feel comfortable venturing on to the Internet.

"She doesn't assume you have a great knowledge of computers," Chute said of McElroy. "We missed that computer generation, and a lot of us think if we do the wrong thing, the computer might break. She goes very slowly, and you're not ashamed to ask questions. I highly recommend her class."

The senior Internet classes at the community center are kept to around five students, which McElroy said allows for a lot of one-on-one instruction.

"In a large lab environment, it's hard to give the individual attention the seniors need," she said. "When the seniors start, a lot of them don't understand the difference between e-mail addresses and web addresses. The need someone really working with them. Sometimes, a couple of them won't even get on computer. They just watch and follow along until they get comfortable."

The comfort-level established in the small classes is invaluable, according to Bryanton.

"I like the idea of being able to keep people here until they're confident," she said of the classes offered at the community center. "When I started at Elder Affairs in 1986, it was mainly a social outlet, travel and bingo. Since then, we've become much more services-oriented. The town of Cohasset doesn't have continuing education, so classes at the community center are a great place to start."

As seniors become more familiar with using the Internet, Bryanton said the opportunity exists for reaping tremendous, tangible benefits.

"From a selfish standpoint, I think it's great for us, because we can find out about issues pertaining to seniors," she said. "Things like taxes, medical care, and medical insurance can be investigated via the Internet. Seniors can talk to people in other states facing the same issues. The potential is very exciting."

Mary McElroy gives instruction on using the Internet to Judith Chute and Osborne Ingram in the computer room at the South shore Community Center.

POLICE NOTES

Ritalin tablets stolen from CHS

Police are investigating a burglary at Cohasset High School where thieves stole about 70 Ritalin tablets and other tablets used to treat seizures.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said a custodian discovered the break-in on Saturday morning.

Police suspect the burglary occurred sometime after midnight.

Jackson said entry was made through the back of the school by the boat shop. The perpetrators also broke a glass display case holding some artwork and broke a window in the nurse's office door, then broke into a locked closet causing a total of about $1,700 in damage.

He said that Ritalin tablets have a street value of about $5 a piece and are crushed and snorted to get a high like cocaine.

Police suspect the perpetrators knew the layout of the building.

"It could be local talent," Jackson said. It is the second breaking and entering in the last six months at the high school.

Anyone with any information should call the police at 383-1055.

Four arrests in February

February was a fairly slow month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were only four arrests, one for breaking and entering, one for assault and battery on a police officer, one for protective custody and finally, one for an outstanding warrant, police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During February, the police department investigated 10 motor vehicle accidents, three of which resulted in personal injury. There were 64 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $1,825 in fines. Additionally, there were 31 parking tickets issued for $1,055 in fines.

During February, there were two reported burglaries, one business and one residence.

During February, the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 407 calls for police service, of those 66 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

Thermal imager

Through the efforts of Det. Gregory Lennon, the narcotics investigator, the Cohasset Police Department has been selected to receive a Hand Held Thermal Imager under the office of National Drug Control Policy, Counterdrug Technology Transfer Program, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. The equipment and all the training will be provided to the department at no cost by the Department of the Army. Delivery of the equipment is expected on or about May 16.

Music with some strings attached

Hingham Symphony Orchestra brings classical home

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Their goal is to provide the South Shore with high quality symphonic music, and since May 1997, they've been doing just that.

They are the members of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra (HSO) and they are under the direction of conductor Jin Kim. Up until three years ago, the HSO was better known as Hingham Civic Orchestra, a volunteer group of musicians that had been entertaining local audiences for 50 years.

"Through the years, it became harder to maintain that all-volunteer organization. It became obvious the organization would have to change its identity in order to survive," said Hingham Symphony Orchestra managing director Nina Wellford.

The HSO is now made up of only 10 percent volunteers. Professional musicians from around the South Shore and Boston area make up the other 90 percent

Currently, the orchestra features musicians ranging from ages 16 to 60.

Aurelien Sabouret plays cello accompanied by HSO conductor Jin Kim on the piano in a performance of Variations on One String by composer Niccolo Paganini.

Each "traditional" orchestral performance includes 40-60 players per session, Wellford said.

"Their backgrounds are all varied, but everyone has one thing in common—they are all passionate about music," she said.

Funding for the HSO comes through grants and generous contributions from the South Shore community. That kind of support is needed when each HSO concert costs approximately $15,000 to put on, Wellford said.

The orchestra gives approximately five extensive classical musical performances per year, in addition to two more intimate performances as part of its "recital series."

Last Saturday's performance at the Sanborn Auditorium in Hingham Town Hall —the HSO's home base — was part of the recital series.

HSO music director, Jin Kim, is one of those professionally trained musicians, as he went to school at such musical institutes as St. Olaf College in Minnesota, The Eastman School of Music in New York, and he also attended Boston University's school of the arts.

Although Kim generally conducts the orchestra, last week's HSO audience was able to see him sing and play piano in the more intimate setting.

Broderick finds his comic groove

Matthew Broderick claims not to know his Q-rating — the number that measures how well the public recognizes an actor and how well it likes him. But here's an educated guess: it's through the roof.

Matthew Broderick (pictured with Maria Pitillo).

It's hard to imagine the actor who's more likable, onstage or onscreen, than Broderick. Even when he's playing people who aren't particularly likable, he's likable. That was true with his terrific turn as the unprincipled teacher in the underappreciated "Election," and it was certainly true of his defining performance in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off."

Science center events herald the season

Spring is in the air.

And so is the rich smell of maple.

The South Shore Natural Science Center is currently celebrating the season with a variety of colorful events.

Last weekend, the science center held its Spring Stirrings event, which included a flower show, food sampling, and the sale of nature-related crafts like herbed soaps, specialty vinegars, and copper garden creatures.

"It's always a really fun party," said science center executive director Martha Twigg, noting the festival is held every year. "And it's always a great way to kick off spring."

The harbingers of spring

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The month of March is a time of considerable excitement, anticipation and often frustration for New England gardeners. Mother Nature usually offers a roller coaster ride of weather highs and lows. We may spend a glorious, warm, spring-like day puttering in the yard and soaking in the sun, sounds and smells of our emerging gardens, only to awaken the next day to frigid, dreary weather or a late season snowfall, a reminder of how fickle New England weather can be. Few South Shore residents are likely to forget the heavy wet snow and devastation caused by the April Fool's Day storm of a few years ago.

Green thumbs up

Gray skies, occasional sprinkles and a brisk, gusty breeze greeted me this morning as I set out in search of spring. As the sun peeked through the steel gray cloud cover, the vibrant yellow, fringed blossoms of the witch hazel 'Arnold Promise' were suddenly illuminated as its dense clusters of delicate ribbons were backlit by the slanted rays of light. Planted many seasons ago as a small, bare-root, mail order sapling, this vase-shaped shrub has been pruned and nurtured over the years and has gradually matured into a handsome 15-foot tree. From my window, the tree resembles a frilly, lemon chiffon cloud, an exquisite addition to a shady corner alongside my water garden and particularly showy against a backdrop of deep evergreen foliage provided by a cedar tree.

There are several desirable cultivars of witch hazels (Hamamelis spp.) currently available in the nursery trade, each offering unique, colorful flowers for several weeks when little else is in bloom during late February and March. Cold weather causes the spidery petals to close

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8

Gear up for another fast-paced day. Channel high energy constructively. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. Tackle old abandoned projects and get them out of the way. An applying alignment of Mercury and Jupiter urges you to be more open-minded and intuitive; you can cut through obstacles and work out glitches that have been holding back progress. The Aries moon aligns with Venus at 9:34 p.m. and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9

Planetary influences turn around at 7:01 a.m., when the moon enters earthy Taurus. Influences today and tomorrow give you an opportunity to catch up on unfinished projects, clean out and prepare for new starts. Get you life in order. A lunar alignment to Jupiter at 2:41 p.m. warns against overdoing or excess of any kind. Maintain a balance. Kick back, relax and concentrate on recharging your batteries this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10

A lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a slow-start morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. Plan to get old business out of the way, tie up loose ends, handle routine chores and errands. The Taurus moon forms a challenging alignment to Uranus that may disrupt the flow of the afternoon. Be adaptable. Romance is in the air this evening. Plan a candlelight dinner for two.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11

The Taurus moon aligns with Venus at 6:31 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 10:46 a.m. the moon enters Gemini. The combination of a Gemini moon and Mercury retrograde can make for a topsy-turvy weekend. Avoid rigid time schedules. Things may not go as planned. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and get things done today. On the other hand, influences are prime for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, MARCH 12

A lunar opposition to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms this morning. Choose your words carefully. Insensitive or indiscreet remarks may come back to haunt you. Fortunately, this influence passes over by late morning, and the remainder of the day rates high for relaxing and enjoying favorite leisure activities. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. Go with the flow. The Gemini moon continues active travel. It's ruler, Mercury, may generate unexpected delays, breakdowns, reversals.

MONDAY, MARCH 13

Plan to get an early start this day. You may need extra time to get where you are going. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 1:59 a.m., and the Gemini moon becomes inactive. A full moon is building and will culminate March 19. Venus moves into Pisces at 6:36 a.m., remaining there until April 6. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 1:51 p.m. and forms easy contacts to Venus, Mercury and Jupiter. Plan a special dinner this evening. Spend quality time with family.

TUESDAY, MARCH 14

A potent combination of planetary influences are in effect. People may be moody, hypersensitive. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. The good news is that Mercury, standing at 2-degrees of Pisces, begins direct travel at 3:39 p.m. The next Mercury retrograde period will begin to take effect in mid-June. The planet Pluto prepares to begin retrograde travel, and the moon continues in emotional Cancer. Be sure to make extra time for prayer, meditation, introspection. Eliminate negativity in your life; let go of past hurts and resentments. Open your heart to higher visions.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15

The impact of a Cancer moon and Pluto station may bring up deep feelings, buried emotions this morning. Keep a cool head. Don't make waves. Pluto begins retrograde travel at 6:49 a.m., 12-degrees of Sagittarius. In addition, the moon forms a challenging alignment to volatile Mars at 7:16 a.m. Influences ease up, however, at 8:43 a.m., when the moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. Mercury and Venus come together at 2-degrees of Pisces, highlighting all artistic endeavors. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry, dance. An outgoing Leo moon arrives at 4:43 p.m.

Hunter's Chicken

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In a continuing search for yet one more way to prepare chicken, I came across a classic French dish, Chicken Chasseur, otherwise known as Hunter's Chicken. Sautéed chicken pieces are simmered in a wine/tomato sauce with plenty of onions and mushrooms and sometimes other ingredients such as leeks. The problem with this recipe is either that it is too fatty due to the chicken skin or too lean, having been stripped of its flavor by the health crowd. I was looking for a reasonably quick recipe, something appropriate for a midweek dinner, with a robust, clean flavor.

The first issue was the chicken itself, the skin being a particular problem. Although I could remove some of the fat through browning, chicken skin is unappealing when simmered in a liquid – it turns rubbery. So skinless chicken pieces seemed the best way to go. Next was the problem of overcooking. White meat is always a bit dodgy since it often ends up dry, so I tested skinless (but not boneless) chicken thighs. These worked well, delivering a moist, rich taste and texture without the fat of the skin.

Although some cooks use a nonstick skillet and almost no oil or butter for sautéing, I did not want this dish to taste like homemade Lean Cuisine. A decent amount of olive oil was necessary to add flavor to the dish and to ensure even cooking of the chicken. I have also found that a "stick" skillet, rather than non-stick, is important since you want dark bits sticking to the pan which can later be deglazed (scraped off and dissolved) with the wine. I tested flouring the chicken thighs before sautéing but was not happy with the results as the dish took on an odd pinkish color and became too thick. (I had to use too much flour to coat all of the pieces.) Instead, I simply added a tablespoon of flour to the vegetables as they were cooking. Larger amounts of flour muddied the flavor and were not needed for thickening.

In terms of the other ingredients, onions were a must and I sliced them instead of chopping. I tested various types of peppers and preferred either red or yellow – green peppers tasted a bit too bitter for this recipe. Big bite-sized pieces were fine since this is a rustic preparation. Garlic or shallots work well here and mushrooms are not only an important part of this recipe, but also add some variation in texture. For the tomatoes, I tried fresh tomatoes and canned but preferred the latter since they have more flavor than fresh tomatoes throughout most of the year. I found that canned diced tomatoes - Muir Glen is my favorite brand - are particularly well suited to this recipe since they taste great and there is no preparation necessary. If you can only find whole tomatoes, make sure that they are packed in juice and not a sauce or purée. Progresso and Redpack are good brands. (Tomatoes packed in sauces or purées are very dull in flavor since the sauce must be cooked which makes it bland and less acidic.)

HUNTER'S CHICKEN

If you cannot find skinless chicken thighs, use skinless but not boneless breasts. You will have to adjust the cooking time, depending on the thickness of the breasts. Start checking them after 20 minutes.

8 - skinless chicken thighs
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
3 - tablespoons olive oil
2 - red or yellow bell peppers or a combination of both cut into 1-inch chunks
1 - large onion cut into 1/4-inch slices
3 - medium garlic cloves finely minced (about 1 tablespoon) or 3 tablespoons minced shallots
1 - tablespoon flour
1 - cup white wine
1 - 28-ounce can diced tomatoes or whole peeled tomatoes packed in juice, coarsely chopped
1 - pound white mushrooms wiped and trimmed
2 - teaspoons chopped fresh rosemary
2 - teaspoons chopped fresh thyme
2 - tablespoons chopped fresh parsley (optional)

1.Season the chicken thighs liberally with salt and pepper. In a large sauté pan or skillet (do not use a nonstick skillet) with tight fitting lid, heat 2 tablespoons olive oil over medium-high heat. Add the chicken and brown well on both sides, about 10 to 15 minutes total. Remove chicken and set aside.

2. Reduce the heat to medium and add the additional tablespoon olive oil. Add the peppers and cook, stirring occasionally, for 5 minutes, being careful to not let them brown. Add the onion and stir to combine. Cover and cook for 5 minutes. Add the garlic and cook for one additional minute.

3. Add the flour to the vegetable mixture and combine well. Add the wine and scrape any bits stuck to the bottom of the pan. Add the tomatoes, mushrooms, rosemary and thyme. Add back the chicken and stir to combine, bringing the mixture to a boil. Reduce to a simmer, cover, and cook for 25 minutes or until the chicken is tender. (Check chicken after 15 minutes.) Adjust the seasonings, add the optional parsley, and serve at once.

This weekend the science center will host its maple festival in honor of March being named "Maple Month" by the Massachusetts Maple Producers Association and The Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture.

The maple festival at the science center has been going on for the last several years, said Twigg.

"We've been doing it for as long as I've been here," Twigg said of the maple festival. We talk about the value of maple, and we also talk about the importance of maple trees."

Twigg said there will be many maple-oriented activities to participate in during the upcoming festival including "a number of activities for kids."

One of the activities said Twigg is a demonstration of how sap is actually extracted — known as maple sugaring — from trees and boiled down to make syrup. There will be a number of "opportunities to taste" various maple treats, she said.

The majority of the month of March will include further maple education activities happening at the science center, Twigg noted.

Diane Baedeker Petit is a member of the Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture, who is currently helping to get the word out on "Maple Month."

Naturalist Steve Barker lends a hand as local children tap into a maple tree during last year's maple festival sponsored by the South Shore

Petit noted the month of March is "the peak of maple season," and she said although most maple-oriented activities happen in Vermont, Massachusetts has quite a few places where foods like maple syrup are extracted.

According to Petit, approximately 44,000 gallons of maple syrup was produced in Massachusetts last year, and more than 182,000 trees on 1,800 acres in Massachusetts are tapped annually for syrup.

"It takes 40 gallons of sap to produce on gallon of maple syrup...maple trees can be tapped at 40 years of age and will yield sap for 100 years or more," Petit noted.

"With Maple Month, we want to make people aware that there is a maple industry in Massachusetts. It's not only restricted to Vermont. And what's more, syrup is more than just a topping for pancakes," she said.

Petit said some maple recipes she is familiar with include "maple duck tacos," "roasted rack of lamb with a maple syrup demi-glaze," and even maple syrup cookies.

The familiar science center bear appears to be having a spring fling of his own.

Petit said there are "different grades" of maple syrup which are produced. In general, she said, darker syrups have more flavor than lighter syrups which are produced.

The process of tapping trees to extract maple syrup is a practice which has been in existence since the days of the first settlers and the native Americans, Petit said.

"They used to gather sap in a hollow log," Petit said of the early process of maple sugaring, "and dropped hot rocks in there to boil the sap."

Petit said the process of making syrup is much different now.

"Most maple syrup producers attach a piece of tubing from tree to tree, and that tubing leads down to what is called the sugar house. The sugar house is where sap is boiled into syrup."

She said the maple tubing is typically applied to a "sugarbush," a bundle of trees where a number of maple trees are located.

"The process is more aesthetic than scientific," Petit said, noting the department of food and agriculture and the Massachusetts Maple Producers Association will continue to promote the concept of Maple Month.

"Anything that promotes local agriculture and generates awareness is a good thing," she concluded. "And the fact that we do indeed have a maple industry in Massachusetts is something that a lot of people don't know."

If you would like more information on this weekend's maple festival call Twigg at (781) 659-2559. For more information on the actual maple season, visit the Maple Producers Association website at www.massmaple.org.

Matthew Broderick finds his comic groove

likeable]," says Broderick, after a recent rehearsal for the new stage comedy "Taller Than a Dwarf," which tunes up at the Wilbur Theatre in Boston, starting March 7, before heading on to Broadway. "One of the fun things about the guy I'm playing [in 'Taller Than a Dwarf'] is that he's not particularly nice."

In the comedy, written by Elaine May and directed by Alan Arkin, Broderick plays Howard, a man who, along with his wife (played by Parker Posey) struggles financially. One morning, everything goes wrong as he tries to get to work. Defeated, he retires to bed, where he plans to spend the rest of his life.

"The play basically centers on trying to get this guy to go back to work," says Broderick.

Broderick, who turns 38 this month, says one of the things he looks for when he chooses a role is whether or not it will allow him to grow as an actor.

"I try to do stuff that I haven't done before," he explains, "although I don't always manage that. But I do try, because I enjoy stretching."

And there's been more stretching in Broderick's career than one might first remember. Broadway fans may forever link Broderick to some very fruitful collaborations with Neil Simon — Broderick originated the lead roles in both "Brighton Beach Memoirs" (for which he won a Tony Award) and "Biloxi Blues."

Film people will probably forever attach him first to "Ferris Bueller's Day Off." But don't forget his strong performance as a young man poisoned by his own racism in Athol Fugard's "Master Harold and the Boys." And, early in his career he took an admirable risk, playing a gay hustler-turned-model in Harvey Fierstein's "Torch Song Trilogy."

Recently he's jumped between disparate projects like "Godzilla," "Election" and "Inspector Gadget."

But his role in "Taller Than a Dwarf" covers some familiar ground for Broderick, who says Elaine May has written a script that's similar in tone, pace and delivery to the work of Simon. But Broderick likes the nastiness within Howard, even if the character aims to please on the outside.

"[Howard] definitely would have a high Q-rating among the people who don't know him well," he says.

This acting career seems to have come quite easily to Broderick, son of the late actor James Broderick. On the same day that he landed the lead role in "Brighton Beach Memoirs," Broderick got a featured role in the film "Max Dugan Returns," and suddenly Broderick — barely 20 — had launched an impressive career both in film and on Broadway.

But "easy" isn't the right word, Broderick assures.

"I feel completely blessed, if I look at the big picture," he says. "But, at the same time, once you're in [the profession], you're always worried, always thinking this [project] isn't as good as it should be, and disappointed in the way things come out."

Broderick hopes some bigger stretches await him in the future. And he knows there's a hole or two in his resume.

"I'm kind of scared [of the idea], but I'd like to do a classic play," he says. "I almost had the chance to do [Henrik Ibsen's] 'The Wild Duck.' I'd love to take a crack at that. I love reading and watching Chekhov, and I probably shouldn't die without trying [a Chekhov play] some day. And of course, there's Shakespeare — he's not bad."

The problem with doing Shakespeare, Ibsen and Chekhov is that you can't confer with the playwright, an opportunity Broderick takes advantage of in "Taller Than a Dwarf."

"[Doing] an original play is fun because the author is there, and they can rewrite, so in a way you get to be a part [of the creation of the play]," he says. "You try very hard to make a scene work, and sometimes if it doesn't, the writer will say, 'Maybe it's my fault,' and they rewrite it. That's kind of exciting. I got to do that with Neil [Simon] a lot."

That kind of last-minute rewriting is one of the reasons to open a show in Boston, prior to Broadway — the playwright, director, cast and crew get the chance to work out the kinks in the untested play.

"I did a play in New York that had no out-of-town [preview], and the problem is that your friends and a lot of people who work in the theater come very early to see it, so you don't get to try it out before," says Broderick. "You know what else is nice about being out-of-town? You get to focus just on [the play]. You're in a hotel, and you're just there to work. When I'm at home, it's a little different."

Broderick, a born-and-bred New Yorker, still lives in the city. In fact, his SoHo home is just six blocks from where he grew up. A perk of this job is that when "Dwarf" lands on Broadway, he'll be able to stay at home when he works.

Broderick says another big factor in choosing his projects is the creative team. In the case of "Taller Than a Dwarf," that means big names like Elaine May and director Alan Arkin. And Broderick says working with Parker Posey, best known as "the queen of independent films," has been another treat.

"I love working with Parker Posey," he says. "I have a very nice scene with her at the end of the play that's very quiet and not as funny, where she tells me she's proud of me. It's nice to have a longer, more complicated scene with a good actor, so I've been enjoying that a lot."

Broderick doesn't offer a prediction on whether "Taller Than a Dwarf" will be a hit, and even if he did, he says his guess wouldn't be worth much.

"I never know," he confesses. "When I saw ['Ferris Bueller'], I thought, 'Well that's good, but I don't think it will appeal to very many people.' I had no idea."

"Taller Than a Dwarf" plays March 7-19 at the Wilbur Theatre, Boston. Tickets are $24-$68.50. Call (617) 931-2787.

New homebuyers face lack of inventory

After three years of record activity, the state's single family housing market experienced a dip in sales in 1999, hurt mainly by a lack of new listings.

Sales of single-family homes in 1999 declined about 2 percent from 1998 levels, according to a report issued by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

"It's been another strong year for the state's housing market," said MAR president Fred Meyer. "But sustaining a record sales pace in the face of rising interest rates and a steady decline in single-family listings is becoming increasingly difficult to do. I don't think it's any big surprise that the pace of home sales is beginning to slow just a bit across the state."

Sales held steady on the South Shore but fell 19 percent on Cape Cod and the islands, due to an insufficient housing supply, the MAR reports.

Single-family home sales dropped about 5 percent in the Boston and Worcester areas as well as in the western section of the state.

However, last year was the most active for condominium sales in the state's history, with a more than 9 percent hike in condo closings in 1999 compared to 1998. The greatest surge in the condo market occurred in southeastern Massachusetts. Condo sales were up in all other areas of the state except for the Cape and the islands.

"We continue to experience record demand throughout the single-family market, especially in the state's more southern and westerly locales," said Meyer. "There, economic revitalization, plus a more plentiful stock of new homes and lower home prices are attracting large numbers of buyers."

"It's been another strong year for the state's housing market. But sustaining a record sales pace in the face of rising interest rates and a steady decline in single-family listings is becoming increasingly difficult to do."

Fred Meyer MAR president

"Whenever there is a rise in interest rates, it threatens the ability of some first-time buyers to get into the market and leads others to scale back their search or buy a smaller home."

Fred Meyer MAR president

Meyer continued, "In every corner of the state, the healthy economy has people feeling confident and financially secure, and they're taking advantage of this present period of prosperity to buy homes."

However, the lack of listings and the limited availability of new construction in most areas has had an impact on the real estate market which has been unable to keep up with demand. In some areas there is only a five month supply of inventory. In Barnstable and Bristol County listings were off some 25 percent from 1998 to 1999.

Another concern, according to the MAR, is the possibility of further hikes in the 30-year fixed mortgage rate which climbed from 6.9 percent in 1998 to 7.9 percent in the last three months of 1999.

"Whenever there is a rise in interest rates, it threatens the ability of some first-time buyers to get into the market and leads others to scale back their search or buy a smaller home," Meyer said. That trend explains why condominium sales did so well in 1999.

Most real estate experts argue, however, that mortgage rates remain low by historic standards, causing sales activity to remain robust. According to the MAR this is particularly the case in the "trade-up" market where baby-boomers are purchasing larger homes and vacation homes as well as condos with money earned from stocks and mutual funds invested in the red hot stock market. Sales in the high end of the market, valued at $500,000 or more, were up 27 percent.

The MAR foresees that as inventory rises in the spring of 2000, the "upward pressure" being placed on prices may ease somewhat.

On-line mortgage lending

Robert B. Segal, CFA

By Robert B. Segal, CFA
SALES MANAGER, BROCKTON CREDIT UNION

If you're confused about what on-line mortgage lending means; don't worry, you're not alone. While many experts predicted that mortgages over the web would take off, in reality it hasn't. On-line lending made up only about 1% percent of the total amount of loans written in 1999, according to estimates by The Tower Group. And many of the major players, such as E-Loan and mortgage.com have yet to show a profit.

The culprit? Failure to deliver the high levels of service demanded by Internet shoppers. At this time, it is no more convenient to conduct your mortgage business over the Internet than by the traditional way, which is to walk into your local bank or make an appointment for your loan officer to visit you at home.

Another continuing misconception about on-line lending is price. In a survey conducted by Myers Internet Services for Mortgage Banking magazine, 75 percent of consumers surveyed felt they could get better rates on the Internet. However, when one shops rates over the Internet and the telephone there is very little difference.

Even the major players on the Web do not offer the best rate. Internet lenders aim to reduce costs by removing the loan officer from the equation. However, they have other expenses that more than make up for these savings. And the heavy advertising outlays needed to build their name recognition limit the ability to offer discounted interest rates.

While the Internet works well as a research tool, consumers still prefer the personal touch available at the local brick and mortar office. Most want the local phone number of a representative in case they have questions about the process or if a problem arises.

While the Internet works well as a research tool, consumers still prefer the personal touch available at the local brick and mortar office. Most want the local phone number of a representative in case they have questions about the process or if a problem arises.

Say a title problem crops up several days before the scheduled closing. Or even worse, an issue with the home's septic system. You may be asking an out-of-state lender, who is unfamiliar with local laws and customs, to resolve the problem in a timely and reasonable manner. And strictly Web lenders with streamlined back offices will be hampered further.

For shopping, the Internet offers some advantages, such as convenience. It also affords anonymity, which is certainly important for those with credit blemishes. It is far less embarrassing to make an application in the privacy of your own home than to sit in front of your loan officer and admit your past mistakes.

Some visionaries wish they could automate the entire mortgage process. In businesses such as stock trading and book selling, this has already occurred. For mortgage lending, though, this is several years away.

The useful sites offer the information and features you need to make an informed decision. In addition, the site must indicate a local contact to answer questions and provide direction about the process.

For example, if you go to the web site for our company, brocktoncu.com, you will find information about mortgage products, current interest rates, a mortgage library including definitions of common terms and information about the application process, a financial calculator, and an on-line application.

The "financial calculator" section for most sites includes a payment calculator, a rent versus buy comparison, an amortization schedule, and a product comparison showing your mortgage payments for various loan types. You may have decided on a Fixed Rate mortgage, but are unsure of choosing between a 15- or 30-year term. The calculator will tell you the difference in monthly payments and the interest savings over the life of the loan.

Other common features include a pre-qualification module, which allows you to make a preliminary evaluation of your home purchasing power. As a matter of standardization, pre-qualification systems make assumptions such as combined debt ratios and so forth. You may actually qualify for a higher loan amount if you have good credit and a lot of savings.

Recently, many lenders have put applications onto the Web. With a few clicks, you send it electronically to the lender. These are mainly abbreviated versions of the application, asking for basic information about employment and credit history. Generally, the lender downloads your file and proceeds to process your application the traditional way. Expect a phone call requesting additional information such as pay stubs and bank statements.

Some visionaries wish they could automate the entire mortgage process. In businesses such as stock trading and book selling, this has already occurred. For mortgage lending, though, this is several years away. And you will always need the services of a local representative, especially when you're dealing with all the intricacies of buying a house.

IN BRIEF

Manning receives international real estate cyberspace specialist designation

Toni Manning, director of technology for Jack Conway and Company, has been awarded the real estate cyberspace specialist designation by the Real Estate Cyberspace Society.

Manning also was elected a charter member of the international society, which is headquartered in Boston, executive director John M. Peckham III announced at a recent ceremony.

The RECS designation is awarded to real estate professionals who have demonstrated their ability to use the Internet and other cyberspace tools to assist their clients. The organization provides members with up-to-the-minute evaluations of strategies and tools for conducting business on the Internet, Peckham said.

Manning, who lives in Hull, managed Conway's Hingham Center sales office before being appointed technology director three years ago. She supervises the company's World Wide Web site at www.jackconway.com and coordinates the educational and training programs at Conway's computer laboratory in Norwell.

This year, Manning introduced the Conway Computer Institute, an intensive series of advanced courses that allows sales agents to expand their skills with the latest in listing and selling technologies.

From sublime to eccentric at the home show

Home show offered everything from spas to electric fireplaces

By Rick Martinec
CORRESPONDENT

If you don't like the splinters from firewood or the smoke from a woodburning stove, there's always gas inserts for fireplaces, or better yet, completely flame-free stoves and fireplaces.

Huh? Yup, they're out there, heaters housed in woodstove-style frames or in complete, realistic-looking hearths with mantels. With lights and mirrors, and a blower shooting out heat, they do seem somewhat real.

They're one of the more eccentric items that were on display at the New England Home Show at the World Trade Center.

Whether looking for mortgage information, interior design ideas or you've finally committed to creating your dream house, the New England Home Show was the place to be.

Take Jim Raboin of Old Timers Slate Roofing Co. from Somerville, for instance. If you know anything about slate roofing, it's not something to be taken, or cared for, lightly. Raboin, who is one of the third generation of his family continuing the 78-year-old business, took the time to explain how it's done, why it's done and why someone with expertise needs to do it.

The company encourages homeowners to use copper, not just for looks for the roof hips and aprons, but the for gutters, as insurance against those awful, damaging ice dams which occur when melting ice seeps under the seams of a typical gutter, Raboin explained.

A last word of advice about slate roofs appears on Raboin's business card - "Don't strip your slate before calling us. It might be good for another lifetime!" Despite claims by some that slate gets brittle and isn't good for reuse, that's a fallacy, Raboin said. Not only is new slate hard and expensive to come by - many quarries have closed, he said, old slate is just as durable and might even have a better patina.

Whether looking for mortgage information, interior design ideas or you've finally committed to creating your dream house, the New England Home Show was the place to be.

The home show typically incorporates the old with the new, with old-fashioned woodworkers and slate roofers to fancy spa systems and kitchen appliances many only dream about. This year wasn't any different.

Maybe you've decided to finally create your dream kitchen. The Home Show offered some great ideas.

There's the Dynamic Cooking Systems line of pro ranges. If you've ever fantasized about being a chef at the Ritz Carlton, this is the range of your dreams and it's a better value than some of its competitors, said Tom Easton, the representative from Almo Distributors at Doyon's Appliances.

"This is the best value of any pro range and the best value for your dollar," he said. The 48-inch stainless model, which comes with a barbecue grill on top, retails for about $5,800, he said. The 36-inch model with a griddle costs about $4,000, he said.

But if these prices are about to turn your dream into a nightmare, take heart: there is a smaller model, sans griddle/grill for around $1,800.

For those whose tastes in kitchens are more on the contemporary side and would like a lot of freedom in the arrangement of stove and oven, Michael O'Brian of Faxon Sales, Inc., represented Windcrest. Windcrest began as a manufacturer of range hoods and decided to make the appliance that goes with it. They have a line of electric and dual fuel cooktops. The electric cooktop has a very high-tech appearance, resembling a sheet of black glass with the burner areas indicated by gray circles. With no spill pans, or nooks and crannies to deal with, this cooktop is a breeze to clean, O'Brian said. And if a spill becomes hard and crusty, no problem, it can be scraped off with a razor blade.

One unique feature of the electric cooktop is its a ribbon technology which allows it to heat up fast, and a red warning light stays on until the burner is cooled — a great safety feature. The 36 inch electric cooktop starts at $2,500.

Perhaps during the frigid spells this winter you've romanticized about curling up with a good book in front of a warm fire; but how many of us are lucky enough to have a working fireplace? Well, having a fireplace has just gotten simple: just plug it in, turn it on with a remote control and delve into your novel. As Jim Langley at Creative Fireplaces says, "It's the fireplace you can take with you when you move."

Langley carries a full line of electric fireplaces from Dimplex fireplace of Cambridge, Ontario. Prices range from the show special, a "cast metal" stove for $499, to $1,900 for a self-contained corner fireplace with full mantle and polished brass trim, installed. These units allow you to create the ambiance of a real fireplace without the mess and inconvenience for just pennies a day.

No visit to the home show would be complete without a stop at the Boston Gas booth. They offered information on residential energy audits, rebates on energy efficient replacement windows and more. If you were unable to attend the show, just call Boston Gas for more information at 800-292-2032.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra brings classical home

HSO conductor Jin Kim takes in the music.

The Sanborne Auditorium has been a good home for the HSO. The venue accommodates about 400 people, and Wellford noted "the acoustics are really good."

"It also has a really intimate atmosphere," she added, "where you can get really close to the orchestra and feel like you're really involved. When you go to a live classical performance, there's not much separation from you and who's onstage. You feel like you're part of the attraction."

Other venues the orchestra has played include St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset and Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham. She said the annual "pops" concert the orchestra puts on in May is always performed at Sha'aray Shalom.

Another upcoming performance set for fall includes one called "Masterworks II," which will concentrate on "more well known composers," according to Wellford.

And she is hoping more and more people will come to see what all the classical buzz is about.

"We really need to get the word out about the orchestra," she said. "Right now, a lot of people still don't know about us, but when anyone comes down here, they always leave impressed."

Part of the reason in the talent and skill of "in-house" composer Alex Kalogeras, who pens an original composition for the orchestra once a year.

Concert performances by the HSO include a mix of classical pieces.

"We play a wide variety of classical music," she said. "We don't like to get stuck in one time period. Each of our programs generally contains a really wide range of music."

Younger HSO fans are treated to "discovery concerts" by the orchestra, which involve a narrator telling a story over a classical music score. This year young listeners were treated to a reading of "Babar the Elephant," Wellford said.

But whether geared toward children or adults, whatever the HSO performs is exciting, Wellford noted.

"To me, when you hear an orchestra perform live," she said, "there's just a certain beauty and a high level of excitement to it. In fact, it's exhilarating. The arts are an outlet that we all need more of in life."

Bringing that art, that culture to local residents is one of the HSO's greatest goals and achievements.

"We want to make classical music more accessible to the people of the South Shore. It's friendly, fun, classy, and it's just a great experience overall. When you come see us, you're not just coming in and going to sleep. You get engaged, and you learn a lot."

"There's so much variety when it comes to classical music," Kim said. "One person can perform a piece, or you could have 100-200 people performing a piece. A symphony represents a culmination of a lot of people working together for one great and glamorous goal."

"To me, classical music is almost like a microcosm of life. We're all moving toward one goal, whether the music is happy, sad, or just plain serious."
HSO CONDUCTOR JIN KIM

"To me, classical music is almost like a microcosm of life," Kim continued. "We're all moving toward one goal, whether the music is happy, sad, or just plain serious."

And support and involvement in the HSO is growing.

"During the last three years, the amount of growth within our organization has been tremendous," Kim said.

Kim's musical background is rich and varied. "I was very much influenced by a lot of western classical music, but also a lot of rock and jazz. When I was younger, I wasn't really into classical music, but when I went to college, that changed."

Kim's talent is very much appreciated by his orchestra members.

"He is an incredible conductor," Wellford said of Kim, "but people should see him sing and play the piano too."

As to future goals for the HSO, Wellford said she'd like every concert to be a sell-out.

"We want to eventually be able to pack the house all the time. We are a really good resource for music in the area. We'd also like to keep getting into schools because there's a large educational aspect that goes along with classical music."

For more information on the Hingham Symphony Orchestra call Wellford at (781) 740-5694. To make a donation to the organization, send contributions to the Hingham Symphony Orchestra, PO Box 259, Hingham, MA, 02043.

Matt Heller, Sue Beck, Jenn Morash and Eva Heinman focus on the performance.

Consolidators are generally reliable

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. Are travel firms like Air4Less and 800-FLY-CHEAP reliable? The fares they publish in the paper are attractive, but don't those fares apply to flights that one has to take right away? I don't want to travel until the middle of July.

A. These so-called "consolidators" are usually reliable; I say "usually," because some of them have been known to go out of business without a trace, leaving passengers up in the air.

To protect yourself, it's a good idea to pay by credit card, since if you don't get what you paid for, and you make a claim within 90 days with your credit card issuer, you can get a refund.

You can buy tickets from consolidators in advance (they're not just for last-minute travel). You should always ask "what if" questions when you buy a ticket this way: What if my flight is canceled or delayed (can I take another airline)? What if I need to cancel (how do I get my money back)? and so on. And you can sometimes find cheaper fares than even consolidators offer on airline Web sites, like www.delta-air.com and www.nwa.com. The real bargains in air travel these days are found in the special sales that airlines offer exclusively on their own sites (not just for weekend deals but for other travel periods as well).

Q. In May 1999, my husband and I flew United to Paris. My travel agent included our Delta frequent-flyer SkyMiles numbers to have the miles credited to our Delta accounts, since Delta and United have an agreement to credit miles in one another's programs.

We got the miles on the first leg of the flight to New York, but the remaining three legs were denied. Their explanation: "Mileage credit is not permitted for travel on United flights operated by other carriers with a flight number 3000 or above. In addition, United Airlines international flights and domestic flights booked in conjunction with an international itinerary are not eligible for mileage credit."

My travel agent has checked the Delta Airlines partnership agreements and can find nothing to indicate that we should not be credited with the miles. Can you tell me who's right?

A. I referred your question to Randy Petersen, the acknowledged "guru" of frequent-flyer programs and publisher of Inside Flyer magazine, and the Web site www.webflyer.com.

He writes: "This is a very common problem and points out the dangers of these so-called alliances. In the case of Delta and United, their relationship is more a limited partnership than an alliance. I'm afraid your reader's worst fears are true: she is eligible to earn SkyMiles for U.S. domestic service only while flying on United. She should ask for credit to her United frequent-flyer account for the missing miles since she won't get them on Delta.

"This proves again that not all frequent-flyer programs are created equal and that some alliances are better than others (domestically, Northwest/Continental have the best alliance, giving full credit on all transactions to the partner airline). Bottom line: Flyer beware."

So, I'm afraid your travel agent was wrong. It's surprising, in fact, that you even got the miles for the domestic portion of your trip since Delta says that domestic flights booked in conjunction with an "international itinerary" are not eligible.

Q. I was wondering if you know how Boracay Island in the Philippines compares with Bali, Indonesia? Also, do you have any ideas on where to get unbiased information on where to stay on Boracay Island, and how much hotels cost?

A. Boracay Island is a rectangular-shape island about seven kilometers long (from north to south) and one kilometer wide, located in the Central Visayan Island group of the Philippines. The island is known for its sugar-white sand beaches.

You can find information and hotel suggestions online at www.boracay.com. Accommodations are inexpensive, ranging from $10 a night for the most basic to $100 for more luxurious resorts.

George Hobica

Bali is a much larger island with more things to do and see. If you're looking for a very laid-back get-away-from-it-all vacation with great beaches, choose Boracay. But, if you'd like a slightly more active vacation, Bali is a better choice.

Q. I'll be traveling to Memphis in April 2000. What's the temperature that time of year? Also, are there any major conventions occurring then that would make hotel space scarce, and where can I find information online about the city?

A. According to www.worldclimate.com, the average temperature in Memphis during April is 62 F. It doesn't look like there are any major conventions in Memphis at that time, but you can take a look at the complete list of events at www.memphistravel.com, the city's official travel Web site.

tightly and when temperatures moderate, the clusters unfurl once again. The unusual blossoms of the majority of witch hazels are extremely fragrant. Tolerant of a wide range of growing conditions, ideal culture includes provision of a moisture-retentive but well-drained soil in an area of full sun to half shade. In addition to the early, persistent, fragrant blossoms, these handsome shrubs display attractive leaves during the growing season which culminate in a dazzling fall display of multi-colored autumn foliage.

Many of these witch hazels, like the cultivar H. 'Arnold Promise' which was developed at the Arnold Arboretum, are the result of cross-pollinating Japanese (H. japonica) and Chinese (H. mollis) varieties to produce H. intermedia hybrids. The deep, coppery-red flowers of Hamamelis 'Diane' are a bold contrast to the lemon yellow blossoms of 'Arnold Promise.' H. 'Pallida' displays especially large, sulfur-yellow blooms and H. mollis 'Brevipetala' demonstrates short-petaled clusters, as its name suggests, which are golden at the tips and deep red in the center. Weston Nurseries considers this last variety the best for our area. It should be noted that our native witch hazel, H. virginiana, which is likely to be found growing in moist woodlands or streamside, is a fast-growing shrub with yellow fall foliage and yellow flowers which appear in autumn unlike those of the varieties derived from Asian species.

As my quest for signs of spring continued, I discovered a host of Johnny-jump-ups living up to their names, their tiny blue pansy faces beaming up at the warm sunshine. Dozens of seedlings have popped up among the shrubs and in nearly every crevice of the pat, but I tolerate their exuberance for they provide desperately needed touches of color in early spring, late autumn and even on mild winter days when few other plants dare to be seen. Later in the season they will be smothered with blooms and as they become leggy, they will be cut back or thinned out with the knowledge that innumerable seeds have been left behind to ensure their renewal. Nearby, a large, velvety purple pansy, most likely another seedling from last season's plantings, serves as an elegant backdrop for a cluster of glistening, pure white snow drops, their dainty nodding heads bobbing in unison in the afternoon breeze.

For many gardeners, however, the true harbingers of spring are the pussy willows. In the meadow, the silvery, silken catkins of the Japanese fan-tail willow have fully emerged, its contorted branches twisting and turning to form fascinating curlicues. Along the brook, wild pussy willows are just beginning to display their small, steel gray-colored catkins. Not far behind will be the larger, furry catkins of the French pussy willow or goat willow, the source of florist pussy willows. Despite the appeal of their soft, distinctive buds, it should be noted that these rapidly growing shrubs offer little in the way of landscape value, attract a multitude of insect species and are easily damaged in storms.

For a spectacular preview of spring, be sure to attend the New England Spring Flower Show from March 11 to 19 at the Bayside Expo Center. Sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, this year's theme is a "Symphony for the Senses." Glorious gardens, informative lectures and an extensive marketplace are all part of this fabulous annual event.

Door shut on village station

Selectmen see no reason to reconsider

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The selectmen's meeting room was rearranged Tuesday night, with extra chairs to accommodate the large number of residents expected to listen to the planning board explain why a village station for the Greenbush commuter rail station should be revisited.

The residents showed up, but the expected debate did not.

Hearing no information which would cause them to change their 1996 vote to locate the station on Route 3A, selectmen decided not to reopen the debate.

"We've already had extensive discussions on where to site the station," said selectmen Ronnie McMorris. "We're only here to listen to why we should reconsider. I don't want to reopen something we don't plan to reopen."

The planning board, who voted 5-0 to ask selectmen to reconsider a village station, did not formally present any new information to selectmen. Chairman Al Moore did tell selectmen he thinks the decision was arrived at too soon.

"We've already had extensive discussions on where to site the station. I don't want to reopen something we don't plan to reopen."
– Selectman Ronnie McMorris

"The decision was arrived at a bit hastily, I think, and much earlier than it needed to," Moore said. "I'll go on record as saying there are a tremendous number of people who don't feel as you do."

McMorris rejected the notion that selectmen were anything less than diligent in their decision to locate

Voters could end septic nightmare

Condo complex to get priority if voters say so

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The sewer commission has opened the door to the possibility of hooking Olde Farm Hill Condominium homeowners on Mendel Road up to the sewer sooner rather than later.

Although sewer commissioners said available capacity in the Central Sewer District should be reserved for "buildable," vacant lots in the district — they will allow the Old Farm Hill condos to connect before the vacant lots if town meeting gives the condo complex priority.

"If town meeting decides that problems with existing houses is more important than developing vacant lots, then we'll go along with it," commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said.

Allowing the five homeowners, who make up the condominium complex, sewer connections will end a septic nightmare that has cost them tens of thousands of dollars. Despite the board of health board saying the condos' failed system constituted a health emergency, the sewer commission has steadfastly said it would not consider connecting Olde Farm Hill — until there is any excess capacity once the upgraded plant is on line and all existing homes and buildable lots in the district are figured in.

Grass-roots group working on plan for Straits Pond

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For many people, living alongside a body of water is a dream.

That dream has become a nightmare at some times for those living in the Straits Pond watershed, however, thanks to the smell of septic discharges, growth of algae, and the mosquito-like midges which swarm in the spring and summer months.

To improve the beauty of Straits Pond, which lies between Cohasset and Hull, a group of 25 to 30 residents from both towns formed an organization to help state and federal agencies in efforts to clean up the pond.

The Straits Pond Watershed Association met Monday night in Hull to discuss possible solutions to the problems which plague the watershed.

Local political officials and hopefuls took the opportunity to listen to the discussion and meet voters from both towns. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) was in attendance as were two of the candidates hoping to replace her, Democrat Garrett Bradley and Republican Maureen Devine, both of Hingham.

Hull Town Manager Phil Lemnios said the greatest problem facing the watershed in the past few years has been infiltration of pollutants from septic systems.

Hull has undertaken two studies in the last 15 years to determine the causes of contamination in Straits Pond. A study in the late 1980s by IEP Consulting and a 1993 Charter School study both showed septic infiltration was a primary problem.

"Both studies agreed septic infiltration was providing a wonderful

Collins stepping down

Retiring after 35 years as an educator

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Citing a desire to finish his career where it started, Cohasset Middle-High School principal Curtis Collins told faculty and staff Monday he will retire at the end of the 2000 school year.

Collins spent 13 years as an English teacher at Cohasset High before leaving in 1978 to begin a career as an administrator which would span another 22 years. He returned to Cohasset as principal of the middle-high school in 1995.

"There was no question in my mind this would be my last stop," said the 60-year-old Collins. "I had a very unique opportunity to come back where I started. Many of the parents now were students of mine when I was an English teacher."

Superintendent Edward Malvey said Collins' blend of interpersonal and managerial skills have made him an outstanding principal.

"He's such a high-caliber administrator. You can find some administrators who are strong in some areas, and some who are strong in others. Curt is the total package."

Town meeting posted properly

At Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he had received calls from residents concerned the March 25 annual town meeting had not been posted properly.

Haddad diffused any potential controversy, saying the warrant for an annual town meeting only needs to be posted a week before town meeting.

"The posting requirements for an annual town meeting are very different than a special," Haddad said. "We don't need to notify the residents 14 days ahead of time like with a special. We needed to post the town meeting at the post office and five other public places. That has been done."

Selectman Diane Sullivan wanted to know why residents couldn't have received their warrants in the mail earlier, but Haddad said there were a lot of details which needed more time to complete.

"We needed the extra week this year," he said. "When you get it in your mailbox, you'll see why."

Insurance info session for seniors

An information session on health insurance options for seniors will be held Wed., March 22, at Cohasset Town Hall. The meeting will take place in the first floor conference room.

The speaker will be Jane Mudge, R.N., director for serving health information needs of elders in the South Shore area.

Interested residents may call Elder Affairs at 383-9112 to register.

New transportation for senior citizens

A new transportation program is now available for seniors needing to go to Boston for medical appointments.

The program is open to seniors in Cohasset, Norwell, Hingham, Hull, and Scituate. Buses will take seniors from their towns to the Hingham Council on Aging building, where a special van and escort will take them to Boston.

A return trip will take seniors to Hingham, where they can board buses back to their individual towns.

The Transportation to Boston-5 program is currently offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays. For more information or to make an appointment call dispatcher Dolores Jakaus of Cohasset Elder affairs at 383-0220.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.
2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.
3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Special needs students have benefited from state's higher standard

Successes in special education

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The 25th anniversary of the Massachusetts special education law, known as Chapter 766, was celebrated by special education advocates last month as the protection of every child's right to equal access to education.

The standard set forth by Chapter 766 is to educate special needs children to their maximum feasible potential, which sets forth more specific standards than does the Federal special education law, which guarantees the right to a free and appropriate public education for all children.

"There are two different standards in the industry at the same time," said superintendent Edward Malvey. "The maximum feasible standard puts greater requirements on school districts to provide services. 766 is quite specific with regard to what has to be done. A lot of special education services wouldn't go to the degree they are now without that specificity."

Legislators on Beacon Hill were scheduled to debate the issue of educational funding beginning yesterday. Malvey said school districts cannot be expected to meet the rigorous standards set forth by 766 without more state assistance.

"I think the standard is here to stay," Malvey said. "But it's a much higher standard than the Federal law, and it puts a tremendous responsibility on school districts. Some relief has to be given."

While the standard set forth by Chapter 766 is a difficult one for school districts to meet without greater state funding, many special needs students have been helped by the specific programs which they are entitled to by the legislation.

"If we didn't have 766, people with autism would have been institutionalized and probably restrained," said Norma Grassey, whose 23-year-old son Matthew, has autism and attended Cohasset public schools until age 16. "We didn't know anything about special education when he was diagnosed at age 3 in 1980. Because of 766, we were able to put him in an early intervention program at Osgood."

Grassey said the Cohasset school system did a wonderful job of placing Matthew in the right programs.

"Matthew took part in summer programs, which a lot of schools weren't doing in those years," she said. "He stayed at Osgood until age 10, when he needed more services than were available at Osgood. He went to the South Shore Collaborative until age 16. At puberty he became more aggressive. He grew to 6' 1" and became more self-abusive and destructive.

"Cohasset had worked with me to keep him at home, but at that point they urged me to put him in residential care. It was very painful, but they let me make the decision."

Matthew was placed in the May Center in Braintree and was able to receive vocational and academic training. At 23, he now lives in a group home in Norwell with four other autistic men and works a few hours per week at Osco Drug in Hingham.

"Without 766, he never would have gotten a job or been a productive member of society," said Grassey, who took Matthew and his friends to Joe's American Bar and Grill for his 23rd birthday last weekend. "Who would have trained him for this job? He's a pretty happy guy and he has an OK life. Considering his disability, that's wonderful."

Like Matthew Grassey, 26-year-old Jay Nothnagle may have been institutionalized in another state, but was able to reach his full potential thanks to Cohasset's special education programs.

Jay was diagnosed with Down's syndrome as an infant. His mother, Taffy Nothnagle, said she was advised to place Jay in an institution.

"We had no idea what the severity of his disability would be," Nothnagle said. "I think back to what the cost to us as a family, to the state, and to him would have been if he was institutionalized. It would have been devastating. He never would have progressed to where he is now."

Cohasset's Jay Nothagle, who has Down's syndrome, is a Chapter 766 success story. Here, he works out with free weights at Fitness First.

Matthew Grassey, shown here in a school photo, is autistic. Chapter 766 ensured he got the help he needed. Matthew, now 23, lives in a group home in Norwell.

The Nothangles contacted the Cohasset school district upon learning of Jay's disability, and he was placed in an early intervention program at the South Shore Collaborative at age 3. At age 5, he attended Osgood, where he was mainstreamed with other students.

> "Without 766, he never would have gotten a job or been a productive member of society."
> Norma Grassey, on her autistic son, Matthew

"At both Osgood and Deer Hill, he had homeroom, art, music, and gym with the regular kids," she said. "Because of that, he had tons of friends. He was in Cub Scouts and was very much a part of those schools."

In the seventh grade, Jay began attending Gates Intermediate School in Scituate and later attended Scituate High School for five years. He was the manager of the football and hockey teams in Scituate and also manager of the Cohasset baseball team.

At Scituate High, Jay learned to drive and took part in vocational training to prepare him for his current jobs at Stop & Shop and Verc's Mobil. He also had a unique opportunity to graduate from both Cohasset and Scituate High Schools.

"One of his classmates in Cohasset said 'Why isn't Jay graduating with us,'" Nothnagle said. "He ended up being in the yearbook for both schools and took part in the senior activities for both schools. That's the value of 766. The kids asked for him because they knew him. He blossomed by being in public school with the other kids."

Nothnagle said Jay's development was accelerated simply by being around all the other students.

"Jay watches people to see how to do things," she said. "He does a lot of things most kids with Down's syndrome don't do. When he was at Osgood in the first grade, the kids could ride their bikes to school. Of course, Jay wanted to ride his bike too. He's always been very athletic and well-coordinated, but we live on Atlantic Avenue and I didn't want him crossing Main Street. I said no. One day, the principal at Osgood called and said Jay had ridden his bike to school. He didn't know if he should praise Jay or kill him."

Jay's teacher at the time, Irene Volpe, suggested a compromise. For about a month, Volpe rode her bike alongside Jay from the Nothnagle home to the Osgood school.

"She did that just to make sure he could make it across Main Street," Nothnagle said. "A lot of people did wonderful things like that for Jay. Through school, he became involved in the Special Olympics and gained a social life. Before 766, nothing said he had to be educated in the manner he was."

THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW

The location of your main water shutoff valve. The location of the electrical switch for your furnace or heating boiler.

The exact location of your septic tank or cesspool cover. Write the measurements on a card and hang it on the main drain pipe.

If you have a gas furnace, a CO detector is a good idea.

The location of the main gas shutoff valve. Your smoke detectors should be checked once a year. Keep a record of when appliances are installed (many are still under warranty when they begin to wear out). An easy way to keep track is to write the date of installation on the furnace or water heater.

All installation of gas appliances are to be inspected by the local gas inspector. Many Homeowners Insurance policies are based on the approval of local authorities.

AROUND TOWN

BC HIGH HONORS

We applaud John R. Crowley-Buick, a junior at Boston College High School — he was inducted into the National Honor Society at a ceremony at Boston College High School.

SPECIAL VOLUNTEERS

Mary Hartwell sent us all a note, saying that the Social Service League and its Consignment Shop mourns the recent death of two of their former members.

Lydia Erickson was a long-time member of the SSL and one of the founders of the Consignment shop.

Frances Chatterton worked as a volunteer at the shop and "always had a smile."

Both women signified what a volunteer is all about and what it has accomplished in this town!

STANDING OVATION

A standing ovation goes to Kristin Sheerin! Kristin was ranked 19th going into the gymnastics state meet at MIT in Boston March 4 — guess what? She ended up placing sixth in the state!

Her coach, Ruthann Ardizzoni, could not have been prouder of her. Kristin scored a 9.1 on the beam and floor, 8.75 on the bars and a 8.05 on the vault — 35.4 all around!

Hope you are as proud of yourself as we are of you, Kristin!

A GREAT DUET

Guess what?! Two Cohasset students performed in a great concert. Andrew Busk and Jenn Buckley spent a weekend in Attleboro, putting together a "duet" (they had never sung together before). Bryan put it all together and they along with 450 students in the festival did an outstanding job!

Kudos to you both, hope you are as proud of yourselves as we are of you!

BACK AT THE HELM

Yes, it is true! Cliff Dickson is back at the helm again!

Cliff, Peg and the whole Dickson family would like me to extend their thanks and appreciation for the visits (both home and hospital), all of the good wishes and all of the extra help people gave to them! Be aware that all of that made Cliff's recovery faster and easier for all!

Welcome home, Cliff!

WORK OF ART

A PERSONAL NOTE

On a personal note — Ann and Clark want to send a message to their friends and Mimi's friends throughout the community — this has been a very sad and difficult week for our families. As many of you know, our Mimi passed away suddenly. We needed you so much and you were all there with your smiles, hugs, phone calls, special cards, dinners, flowers — most of all, your "Mimi stories"!

Thank you so much, we love you as much as Mimi did!!

DEAN'S LIST

Providence College sends us great news that three Cohassetites have been named to the dean's list status, we send applause to Brian Riley, Andrea Freeman and Brian Kilroy — good job!

CHICKEN SOUP

Jane Hoffman has a secret to share with all of us (and we are jealous that we are not neighbors) — everyone knows that there are "secret recipes," and she isn't sure how Barbara Mullin makes such grand chicken soup!

Jane informs us that Barbara shares her soup every time it snows or when they are "under the weather" (they must be the only neighbors praying for snow). Barbara even brings her precious girls along, so that they can carry the corn muffins!

God bless neighbors and you also, Barbara!

ST. SEBASTIAN'S

St. Sebastian's School sends word that we should be very proud of Thomas Digan (9th grader) and the son of Thomas and Mary Ann Digan of Stanton Road and John Cotter (tenth-grader), son of Paul and Margaret Cotter of Jerusalem Road; they both made the 2nd quarter honor roll!

Good work, guys!

XAVERIAN HONORS

Three more Cohasset scholars to report on. They all attend Xaverian Brothers High School and they all achieved honor roll status: Thomas N. Anderson, Barry C. Tufts and Michael Agostino Jr.; all did the best they could and we are very proud of you and your efforts!

Michael Calorio, a defenseman on the Rectory School hockey team, was recently honored as the Most Valuable Player in the Rumsey Hall Hockey Tournament in Washington, Conn. Mike was a standout both offensively and defensively in all three games in the tournament. This won the tournament; a real feat!

Michael, a ninth-grader, is the son of Thomas Calorio and Marie Toomey of Cohasset. He deserves a hat trick from all of us!

That's the news — send yours!

IT'S HAPPENING

Easter egg hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct its 24th annual Easter egg hunt for children 3 through 11 years old, at noon Saturday, April 8, at Deer Hill School field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter Bunny and helpers will be on hand.

Children will be divided into three separate chronological groups: group 1, ages 3 and 4 (with parent); group 2, ages 5-7; and group 3, ages 8-11.

Participants should gather around their designated area sign before noon and bring a small paper bag or container for candy.

Individually wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape and will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold onto it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are Cohasset Rotary Club, Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 9146, American Legion Post 118 and the Cohasset Police Association. Rain date will be noon, Saturday, April 15, at Deer Hill School field.

MS walk steps toward a cure

On April 8 thousands of friends and neighbors will take steps to find a cure for multiple sclerosis.

The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 8, at the South Shore Community Center with a 10K route through the town and along the shore of Cohasset Sandy Beach. The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk, presented by the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, is one of 21 walks across Massachusetts and New Hampshire united by one goal—to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system with life-long physical and emotional effects.

MS Walk participants raise funds to support research, education, and advocacy that enhance the quality of life for 10,000 people with MS and their families throughout Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

To register for the MS Walk call 800-493-WALK (9255) or visit www.msnewengland.org.

Annual kitchen tour

Designer fabrics, lush floral arrangements and table settings befitting the most elegant and formal of evenings to the most comfortable and relaxing of family breakfasts. Hors d'oeuvres, finger sandwiches, pastries and sweets from the best-loved South Shore caterers. It's all part of the South Shore Community Center's Kitchen Tour 2000, Friday, April 7, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

As individual as their owners, each of this year's five Cohasset kitchens reflects the vast and varied options available to today's homeowner when planning or decorating a kitchen as well as the individual style and flare of today's hostess.

Starting at Cohasset's landmark Lightkeeper's Residence, which will serve as both respite spot and marketplace, the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and village. Tour highlights include a recently renovated Gambrel Colonial which overlooks the Cohasset Golf Club, a unique, twin-peaked village antique, an artist's whimsical renovation of a former one-story cottage and a New England saltbox with Southwestern-inspired interior design as well as a Newport cottage-style home.

Adding additional interest to the architectural details of the homes and personal interior design styles of five homeowners, will be the artistry of the homeowners coupled with local floral designers and merchants who will create table settings in the kitchens and dining rooms of each home, plus festive stationery options for invitations, menus and placecards designed by Notable Occasions in Hingham. And if the tablescapes have tour goers craving a little something more, the tour includes refreshments at each home and the Lightkeeper's Residence provided by area caterers and bakeries including Laura Atherton, Bernard's, Brian's Bakery, Joan Conkling, Fireking Baking Co., French Memories, Gimme the Skinny, Morning Glories, Season's Cafe, and The Silent Chef.

While at the Lightkeeper's Residence, tour goers can view the wares of such merchants and crafts people as Nancy O'Donnell, Janet Kingan, Cohasset Greenery, Creative Memories, Elegant Entrances, Flowers and Festivities, A Matter of Taste and Notable Occasions.

Advance tickets may be purchased at the center or by calling 781-383-0088. Tickets are $20 through March 31 and $25 per person beginning April 3 through the day of the tour. Ticket sales are limited, so early purchase is suggested.

Funds from Kitchen Tour 2000 will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The center, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, is a non-profit organization founded nearly 60 years ago. It is dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

For more information about the Kitchen Tour or for a free course schedule call 383-0088.

Teen Garage hours

The Teen Garage, for grades 6 and over, will be open this weekend, March 17, 18 and 19 as follows: Friday, 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., dance for grades 6-8, 7 to 10 p.m.; Saturday, 4 to 10 p.m.; and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m.

Combating poverty

Kay Doherty, of Sharing Inc. will give a talk and slide show at the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset on Sunday, March 19, immediately following church service at 11:15 a.m. in the church's Bates Hall. A luncheon of lasagna, salad and desert will be served by the church prior to Kay Doherty's slide show presentation highlighting her work during the past 20 years in combating rural poverty in the southern United States.

The Second Congregational Church of Cohasset is located at 43 Highland Ave. and is handicap accessible. The general public is welcomed and encouraged to attend this informative and uplifting event. Call the church of Cohasset at 383-0345 for more information.

Information about the upcoming "Good Friday Walk" will be available on Sunday, March 19, including sponsor sheets and a volunteer signup list. The walk occurs on Good Friday, April 21, between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m., commencing and ending at the Plymouth River School in Hingham.

Rosemarie's gift

Organ donation continues a legacy of giving

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In death, as in life, Rosemarie Kierce never stopped giving.

Rosemarie passed away Jan. 31 at age 20 as the result of a catastrophic seizure, leaving behind a legacy of selflessness remarkable for someone so young.

A Cohasset resident, the effervescent, outgoing Rosemarie had attended special needs classes at Scituate High School and planned to graduate in 2001. She had mild mental retardation and had been treated for less severe seizures for the last seven to eight years.

Despite the obstacles she faced on a daily basis, Rosemarie awoke each morning with boundless enthusiasm and a desire to better the lives of everyone around her. She volunteered at South Shore Hospital and in the Canton warehouse of the SHARE (Self-Help And Resource Exchange) program.

Her final act of generosity has enabled others to live on. As the youngest of their eight children was kept alive on a respirator, Christopher and Rose Kierce decided to honor Rosemarie's spirit by donating her vital organs to those in desperate need.

"A nurse asked me if I'd be interested in organ donation," Christopher Kierce said. "I knew at some point we'd have to make a decision. Rose and I talked a little bit and we both knew she would have liked that. For all that she was able to do in her life, she always gave her best."

Rosemarie's heart, liver, kidneys, and lungs were all donated to the New England Organ Bank and transplanted to those on waiting lists. The recipients of her liver and left lung passed away from complications following transplants, but four others are alive today thanks to her donated organs.

Her heart was transplanted into a 55-year-old mother of five in New England, who had suffered from a heart condition known as idiopathic cardiomyopathy. Her right lung was transplanted into a 50-year-old woman from New England who had been suffering from emphysema.

Rosemarie's left kidney was transplanted into a 60-year-old married man outside of New England who had been suffering from end stage renal disease. He had been awaiting a transplant for four years and is now home with his wife, children, and grandchildren. Her right kidney has given the gift of life to a 70-year-old father of two who is a college professor and had been suffering from diabetes.

"I think it's just amazing that she was someone with special needs and one of her organs went to a college professor," Christopher Kierce said.

The organs donated to the New England Organ Bank go to those awaiting transplant in New England unless an emergency dictates they be shipped to another part of the country.

"It's a wonderful program," said Rosemarie's brother, John Kierce. "She would have definitely helped out someone. You know you're helping someone else out and, in some degree, she's going on."

While still in shock at the death of their youngest daughter, Rose Kierce said conversations with those who have had transplants assured she and her husband that they made the right decision.

"We've talked to people who have received organs and it's helped us to get through this tragedy," she said. "A lady came to the wake, and her husband received a heart 12 years ago. She heard about the organ donation and just wanted to say thank you."

While her donated organs have helped to keep others alive, her generous spirit brightened the lives of countless others during her 20 years.

"Rosemarie was always looking for new, nice things to do for other people," said Kevin McCord, her homeroom teacher this year. "A lot of the kids in the class are into professional wrestling or bands like N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys. She would bring in WWF or teen magazines which she bought on her walks to Cohasset Village just because she knew everyone would enjoy them. That was Rosemarie."

In his first year as the teacher of Rosemarie's special needs class, McCord said it was difficult to initially gain the trust of the students. He said Rosemarie was the first in the class to accept him as a teacher and led the other students to follow suit.

"It was hard for the kids at first," McCord said. "I wasn't Mrs. Hughes, the teacher they were used to. I was a male, and I was trying new things. Rosemarie was my ace, my support in trying something new. She was such a leader. I had a student I could run things through and the other students would follow her. In so many ways, it's not the same without her here."

An avid sports fan, Rosemarie would sit in front of the television and watch her beloved New England Patriots with one of her prized possessions, a hat autographed by Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe.

"She enjoyed the Bruins, the Celtics, the Pats, and even the WWF," said John Kierce. "It was kind of odd, because the rest of us aren't big sports fans, but she always loved them."

Rosemarie was an avid participant in sports, competing in the Special Olympics in track and field and playing basketball for the Till Blue Jays, a team from a recreational program for kids with special needs. Her love of shooting hoops was rewarded with the team's Rookie of the Year award.

Rosemarie Kierce

Like many girls her age, her walls and daily planner were decorated with pictures of the Backstreet Boys. Her mother brought her to the FleetCenter to see her favorite group in concert, which was a thrill for Rosemarie.

"The FleetCenter had a special needs section, which we didn't know about," Rose Kierce said. "We got to sit very close to the stage, which was very nice. Rosemarie was so excited. It was a fabulous show and she and her friends had a wonderful time."

Rosemarie's popularity among her classmates caused her parents to install an additional phone line to meet the demand of friends needing a willing listener.

"That phone never stopped ringing," Rose Kierce said. "Her friends called all the time."

In addition to her kindness, Rosemarie's life was characterized by a dedication to meet challenges head-on. She took part in a speaking program called "Understanding Differences," in which special needs students went to area elementary schools to explain their disabilities to the younger students.

"At first, she was very reluctant," said Taffy Nothnagle, a special needs teacher who worked with Rosemarie in both Cohasset and Scituate. "She talked to the kids about her seizures, and what they felt like to her. She also talked to a parents group in Reading about her processing problems. It's not easy to talk about your disabilities but she did it."

Considering the challenges she faced, McCord said Rosemarie's accomplishments were remarkable.

"Special needs kids have to work harder and persevere even more to do the things so-called average kids do," he said. "She did public speaking, keyboarding, and pottery. She was training as a bagger at Scituate Marketplace and also worked at Dance Carousel. The essence of Rosemarie was a willingness to try new things. She saw a challenge, met it, and wasn't going to let it stop her."

McCord said losing the popular leader of his class has been a devastating blow, but said Rosemarie is never far from anyone's heart in her former classroom.

"I can't say enough about what she meant to myself and everyone in this class," McCord said. "We feel her spirit here and someone is constantly making reference to her. We keep her student of the week awards on the wall and keep her desk. Someone else can sit there from time to time, but everyone understands it's Rosemarie's desk. Losing her was such a shock and it's something only time will heal. But she'll always be a part of this class."

Rosemarie's parents were awestruck by the number of lives their daughter touched and by the many wonderful people who attended her funeral.

"The turnout was so wonderful," Rose Kierce said. "So many of the special needs kids, past and present teachers, and many of her other school friends came."

In lieu of flowers, Rosemarie's parents asked donations in her honor be made to the Friendship Home in Norwell, which will be a fully-staffed home with seven bedrooms which provides a safe environment for individuals with special needs.

The Friendship Home will serve aging parents, single parents, and families with other children. It will allow needed time off for emergencies, for time alone, and gives families the opportunity to spend uninterrupted time with other members of the family without the stress of caring for one's needy loved ones.

As four others live on thanks to his sister's gift of organ donation, John Kierce said he will remember the positive attitude she brought to each day.

"For such a young person, she lived a very full life," he said. "She helped out everybody she could."

The Kierce Family wishes to thank the many wonderful teachers, friends, and relatives for their prayers and continued support through this very difficult time.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

FORM AND FUNCTION

When choosing a window dressing, ask yourself some questions that can help with your decision. Do you need privacy? How much? When? A treatment that screens the view during the day may be too revealing at night. Ask yourself whether the room gets a lot of sun exposure, and at what time of day. Do you want to filter the light, block it, or admit as much as possible? Do you want to hide the outside view, or invite it inside? Do you want the window to appear taller or wider? Do you want to unify separate windows? And, do you want the window to be a focal point or to sit quietly in the background?

Window treatments can add drama to a room while also serving a practical purpose. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can help you create beautiful rooms that also meet your needs for privacy. We offer complete interior design service and coordinate all elements of a room including the window treatments, wallpaper, flooring, furniture, and accessories. Welcome the spring season with newly remodeled rooms. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment.

HINT: Vertical blinds are a good window-treatment solution for sliding glass doors with a sunny exposure.

OPINION

A warrant for your attention

This week everyone should have received a copy of the Annual Town Meeting Warrant in their mailbox. We hope you didn't toss it away with the junk mail but put it aside where you can pick it up and read it when you have a few minutes.

It's a very important document that contains a lot of information that directly affects your quality of life right here in Cohasset.

In the past we've waited until the Cohasset Mariner issue that comes out on the Thursday before the annual town meeting to write a "town meeting editorial."

But in going over the 55-page warrant, we thought that some of you might not realize what a gem the booklet is and we wanted to encourage you to study it before next Saturday rolls around.

For one thing, the warrant provides an overview of what's coming up at town meeting, which gets underway at 10 a.m. March 25 in the middle-high school gym.

Thanks to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the warrant includes a 12-page narrative of the town's financial picture followed by pages of budget numbers and graphs.

Then there's the list of 41 articles — or items of business that come before town meeting.

We must admit in our years of covering Cohasset, we can't remember a town meeting that involved such a range of important issues.

There's the proposed $41 million school renovation/expansion project and an alternate proposal to complete repairs to the schools in phases, and the $3 million library project — just to name some of the big ticket items. Other highlights include proposed zoning changes that could affect future development on Rte. 3A, enacting the Pay-As-You-Throw trash disposal system and whether minors should be fined for using or buying tobacco products.

Voters will also decide whether to set the stage for expansion of the police/fire station, create the position of director of finance and pay for a feasibility study to develop a plan for to solve wastewater problems in the Little Harbor Watershed.

Whew!

It's a lot to handle but we're sure that Cohasset town meeting voters are up to the task.

We encourage all of you to read the warrant and mark March 25 down on your calendar so you won't forget to attend town meeting. If you haven't witnessed this venerable form of democracy, you won't be disappointed. Participation in issues that affect quality of life and pocketbook should be a priority for all of us. Spending a few hours a year taking part in the future direction of your town is time well spent. You won't regret it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Toxic Terrorism

TO THE EDITOR:

I have just received a letter from Cohasset Heights, Ltd., signed by Paul Barry Jr., which I am told is a town-wide mailing, and I can no longer hold my silence on the matter. This "offer" or "request for support," in no uncertain terms, could be rightly termed Toxic Terrorism.

The quid pro quo benefits promised by CHL are measures that decent business people extend every day without extorting concessions from their host community. Everyone agrees that solid waste is a problem — my solid waste is my problem, Cohasset's solid waste is Cohasset's problem. Who in their right mind would truck in (or train in) Boston's or Newton's solid waste and "process" it right on top of a protected watershed zone that provides the most life-sustaining resources to the community? And all under the assumable threat of the kind of irresponsible corporate behavior that seems to extort by implying, "Do what we say or we'll just go belly-up and leave you the mess."

The intent here smacks of a shameless act of toxic terrorism and a child could see it for what it is. I wouldn't be able to face any children of mine if I ignored the appearance of an extortion threat/ransom note like this and pretended that the intentions behind it will somehow just go "away." Even the children know that there's no such place as "away" anymore. My only regret is that the children of Cohasset aren't allowed to vote down such easily seen-through matters, so it's up to us adults to do the voting for them. There will be four articles on the Warrant for March 25 Town Meeting: Articles 16, 28, 29 and 30. Passage of these articles will ensure the future of our resources.

Support school project

TO THE EDITOR:

As former students of the Cohasset School system from kindergarten through high school, we returned to Cohasset seven years ago, just prior to the birth of our first child, to take advantage of raising our family in one of the finest communities on the South Shore.

The quality of Cohasset's education system was a key reason that we chose to come back home to raise our family. Our experiences more than 20 years ago were certainly enough to sell us on the fact that Cohasset's schools prepared us for the challenge our adult lives presented, but the excellence of Cohasset's educational system has continued to prevail. This is evidenced in the most recent milestone of Cohasset's 10th grade students having achieved some of the highest MCAS scores in the state.

As Cohasset students have continued to excel, so has their faculty by supporting them both academically and extracurricularly. All of this has happened in spite of the fact that the facilities, i.e. classrooms, science and language labs, cafeterias, hallways and locker rooms that we sat, learned, ate, walked and played in 25 years ago, are still the same. There's something wrong with this picture; and this spring, we, the citizens of Cohasset, have one last chance to correct that travesty. We have an opportunity to tell our hard working students, teachers, coaches and administrators that we appreciate all they do each day under far less than optimal conditions.

One only has to tour the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools to see that the buildings are old. The original high school was built in 1950, the original Deer Hill in 1955. Current infrastructures (heating, electrical, plumbing systems, roof, windows, etc.) are both inadequate and inefficient. Operating and maintenance costs continue to soar. The buildings do not comply with federal and state standards, notably the Americans with Disabilities Act. The current building conditions threaten accreditation of our schools, and the buildings do not meet current educational programmatic needs of the school system. It is shocking that we have let things go this far, but now is the time to amend the past. We must look forward and act now.

To renovate now, we guarantee 60 percent state reimbursement of the entire project; this timing is critical to ensure the least cost to the town. We address all physical plant, enrollment and educational program needs for the Deer Hill, middle and high schools through measured expansion and a complete renovation, all with a 50-year future in mind. We provide a systemic and timely construction approach with the least disruption to the ongoing educational process. We complete separation of the middle and senior high schools, and we do not risk higher costs and uncertain state reimbursement.

As you can see, the need is paramount, and the time to act is now. Our students and faculty deserve modern facilities. Quality schools are one of our most important community assets. They are the reason our parents raised us in Cohasset, and the reason we intend to do the same.

We've always been proud to be graduates of Cohasset High School. Let's ensure that Cohasset's students of today and tomorrow never feel any differently. Please support and vote for the recommendation of the School Facilities Committee, the School Committee and the Selectmen. Attend Town Meeting March 25 and cast your "Yes" vote to support quality education in Cohasset April 8.

No deals with CHL

TO THE EDITOR:

As long as the area around the Cohasset Heights landfill (CHL) is zoned Light Industrial, Cohasset will be bombarded with proposals for landfills and trash transfer stations. Under state law a solid waste facility is allowed as a matter of right in an Industrial District.

CHL now has three proposals for that area: (1) a 27.5 acre 300 tons per day (tpd) C&D landfill, (2) a residual waste landfill, and (3) a 500 tpd trash transfer station. Even though CHL's first Area V expansion was rejected in 1996, they have persisted in trying to use this area for solid waste uses.

CHL has contaminated groundwater in the Lily Pond watershed, damaged over 10 acres of wetlands, and violated its site assignment, zoning permit, and state regulations by dumping waste illegally in unpermitted areas. And now CHL expects us to trust them that they will "agree" to not putting a landfill in Area V if they get their trash transfer station?

There must be no deals with CHL. We can end this all by changing the zoning of this area. Say "no" to all of the above by voting yes on Article 16 at the March 25 Town Meeting.

Number crunching

TO THE EDITOR:

I know I am old and retired and should not worry, but I do.

I worry about the town debt. In August 1966, the debt was $6,421,000. If everything goes as outlined in this town meeting, it will be in the high $70 million.

This means our debt limit will be over the five percent of equalized valuation allowed by the state, and the town will have to apply to the Emergency Finance Board for an increase limit to 10 percent of value.

Sort of like maxing out on your credit card.

I worry about the cost of the school renovations.

We built a new school for $10 million, and now we want to update three for $42 million. These schools are not 50 years old. Would it be better to bulldoze the three and build three new ones for $30 million?

I know something has to be done, but $42 million?

The state is supposed to pay 60 percent, but the town has to borrow the whole $42 million. I worry about the new library.

The library committee thinks they can remodel the old Osgood with no cost to the town except for the $700,000 from the sale of the present library. I was on the school facilities committee when we presented our proposal for the new Osgood and the old building was to be sold for 1 million, which was to go to the town along with any future tax revenues. How much more does that add to the cost to the town for the library? I worry about the bond rating of the town.

When I was treasurer, we were successful in raising the bond rating of the town twice. I was told by both rating companies that Cohasset bond rating would be higher if we had more commercial or business tax base.

Donald Stasko has a proposal to increase Cohasset Plaza. Don has proven he runs a first-class operation and should be allowed this expansion which will benefit the town as well.

Paul S. Barry is also proposing a processing/recycling/transfer facility at Cohasset Heights. This also seems to be a win/win situation for the town. The Barrys are good citizens, let's put an end to all this legal stuff, the dumping has stopped, let them get back to work.

MARINER ON THE STRET

According to plans for a proposed new library at the former Osgood school, the library would not use the entire building. What do you think might be a compatible use for the rest of the old Osgood school?

"I'd just like to see something to do with seniors. Anything at all."

— Ruth Rautiala

"I don't think the police station would be good. I think they should put in something for the historical society's purposes. I don't think the two little museum buildings have enough space."

— Brooke Lombardy

"I know there have been some people in town advocating for elderly housing. Maybe they could convert some of Osgood into a couple of apartments. There's not much other room left in town."

— Bruce Edmonds

"I think a new library would be kind of redundant. You've got Scituate and Hingham as part of the network. You can always go to Hingham if you want a bigger library."

— John Dwyer

"I think it might be a nice place to put the senior center."

— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

"I'm a little concerned about a police station there because I'd like to save the playground. Maybe some other educational programs could function there."

— Diane Kennedy, with daughter Caroline

Getting the best deal for Cohasset's future

EDUCATION MATTERS

ROBERT B. SPOFFORD

The Cohasset School Facilities Committee has been working diligently over the past few months in preparation for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday March 25. I would like to provide an update of the options that we have been considering since the December Town Meeting.

Through the month of January the committee reviewed in detail all the problems at each school to arrive at a figure and plan to address each item. We broke each building down into six areas: Code Issues, Life Safety Issues, Equipment Past its Useful Life, Operational Efficiencies, Maintenance/Finishes and Educational Program. The total figure at the Deer Hill School is $5,513,986 and $13,820,323 at the Middle/Senior High School for a total amount of $19,334,309. This amount will not be reimbursed by the state under the current school building assistance plan. Also, this plan does not address the future enrollment needs at each school or any educational program requirements as outlined by the school committee and school administration.

Through the month of February we reviewed in detail plans for a complete renovation of the existing schools to address all the items identified above and to also include future enrollment and educational program needs as outlined. This approach would be reimbursable by the state at 60 percent. We have received written confirmation from the state that approves our project at this reimbursable amount. The total cost of both projects as currently designed is $41,330,000 broken down as follows: $11,633,499 at the Deer Hill School and $29,697,825. With the 60 percent reimbursement the total cost to the Town of Cohasset will be $16,532,000.

When comparing the two options there is a dollar differential of $2,802,309 along with a scope of building differential that is significant and will have lasting effects for many years to come.

We have submitted the floor plans for both schools to the state to meet the March 1 deadline and after a lengthy review with our architect, Strekalovsky & Hoit, we have received a verbal commitment that the plans are acceptable and in fact the state is pleased with what they reviewed. We anticipate receiving a formal letter of acceptance in time for the Annual Town Meeting.

Through the month of March we will be fine-tuning and reviewing in detail the interior space requirements at each school along with site and playing fields as part of the reimbursable project. We also will be reviewing the maintenance plan and operational budget changes that are required for any final presentation to both the town and state to avoid in the future the present situation.

We are planning a public hearing, in addition to our Wednesday weekly meetings, on Tuesday, March 21 at 7:30 p.m. in the high school auditorium to review in detail the plans for each school. We encourage all citizens to attend the meeting to gain a better understanding of the problems at each school and to review the plans developed to address these problems in the most fiscally responsible manner possible. As always we welcome constructive comments or input from any citizen at any time.

Robert B. Spofford is chairman of the school facilities committee.

Defense of clotheslines

The Vermont legislature is about to take a stand against progress and I say more power to them.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

They're considering a bill that would guarantee housewives the God-given and inalienable right to hang their washing out to dry.

They call it the Right to Dry bill.

Seems many of the exclusive vacation condo developments that have sprouted up around the Green Mountain State have rules that ban clotheslines from their premises.

I'm not sure of the reasoning behind the restrictive clause but I suspect it has something to do with the fear that the sight of sheets, shirts and shorts drying on the line will somehow detract from the image of the complex.

The bill, filed at the behest of the environmental group Project Laundry List, would forbid laws, regulations and private contracts from banning the installation or use of clotheslines to dry clothes.

"One hundred years ago, everybody hung out their clothes but nowadays we're too prudish to see somebody's underwear hanging on the line," says Alex Lee, coordinator of Project Laundry List. "It's a Yuppie ethic."

I must confess I'm glad Lee and his gang have filed their bill. In the wake of electric and gas clothes dryers, a whole generation is in danger of missing one of the delightful sights and smells of yesterday.

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth it seemed like every house had a clothesline extending across the backyard from which flapped the household wash like pennants on a yacht.

At my house it was attached to a rear window and ran on a pulley to a nearby tree. Every Monday, my mother washed clothes, put them through the rollers of a wringer to get most of the water out and then hung them out to dry.

Now the automatic washer-drier does it all for you.

Sometimes, on a cold winter's day, the wash froze on the line and had to be brought inside and draped over the furniture to thaw out while the smell of newly washed clothing permeated the house.

Also missing from the modern household is the barrel that was set on end in the backyard for the disposal of waste.

The head of the house obtained the barrel, usually an old oil container from a local garage, cut holes near the bottom for draft and put it to work burning the household's rubbish.

Now burning one's own rubbish at home has been ruled off limits in the interests of the environment.

As far as I know, the deliverymen have not been outlawed. Like old soldiers, they just faded away. In my house they were the milkman, the bread man and the vegetable man.

The milkman left milk in glass bottles and picked up the empties before you were up in the morning and the bread man from Cushman's bakery arrived later in his panel truck from which one could select breads and cakes.

The vegetable man, a lank fellow in faded overalls called "Mr. Hess," who lived on Quincy Avenue (now the site of a discount hardware store), came once a week in his dilapidated old truck with a selection of vegetables.

It's too bad there were no defenders to introduce legislation that would have kept them around.

COHASSET CARES

We are all cohabitants of this sphere

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Like gasoline, trash disposal costs are increasing. But with PAYT/Save As You Throw, each individual has direct control over personal trash disposal costs. In other words, you determine how much you pay for trash disposal each week — depending on how well you recycle.

Sure, SAYT is very strong encouragement to recycle, but let's face it, people, recycling is a fact of life, and it should be. The "good" old days of reckless waste are over. And who would say this is not a good thing?

There is no free lunch. We pay as we go in this life. Recycling is an issue of personal character, our responsibility for being allowed to live. We're in this together. We're co-inhabitants of this sphere. Does being born American give us the right to litter, to waste, to forget about recycling?

Selfishness doesn't fly anymore. Selfishness is Saddam Hussein. Selfishness is Pinochet. Selfishness is the rapist, the assaulter, the person with a gun firing into a bunch of people. Or a little kid, being petulant, who happens to have access to a gun. Selfishness is the graffiti guy who thinks the world belongs to him, is his alone. And look at the results.

You may say it's a long way from not recycling to scrawling graffiti or murder, but I say, it's a continuum of laziness, selfishness, self-centeredness, irresponsibility. I'm for orderliness, honesty, fairness, equality, appreciativeness, responsibility. I would hope most of us are. I would hope most of us vote for Save As You Throw Saturday, March 25. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Artist of the month

Liz Haywood-Sullivan, a member of the Pastel Society of America, shows her work at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library from March 1 through April 26.

Haywood-Sullivan, now full-time fine art and children's art educator, began her career as a designer/professional illustrator.

Her work is graphic through her choices of composition combining natural forms with architectural elements.

Her preference to work "en plein air" (on location) has taken her to a favorite destination, the Southwest United States and recently to Ireland where she discovered a new quality of light and color.

"Green is a difficult color to get right, in Ireland I had never seen such a variety of greens," she says. The color saturates the atmosphere and is a wonderful counterpoint to the warm palette I work with in the Southwest."

Haywood-Sullivan has had numerous awards, the biggest distinction being elected as a full member to the Pastel Society of America. She is a gallery artist at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, a member of many art associations and is the co-coordinator for the Quincy ArtFest.

Come in and view some beautiful pastels by Liz Haywood-Sullivan. Gallery hours are Monday, Tuesday and Thursday 9 a.m.-9 p.m., Friday and Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman: Should the village train station be resurrected? Why or why not?

SELECTMAN/ Robert Sturdy

Locating the Greenbush station in Cohasset Village is a vital component of the village revitalization effort and a necessary source of non-town funding to provide significant infrastructure improvements, such as parking, roads and sidewalks.

The planning board originally proposed the village station location to the MBTA. At that time, MBTA engineering consultants had shown the Cohasset station on the 3A "Winter Garden" site for no other reason than that the site was an existing, unused parcel of land. The MBTA then expended a considerable effort in preparing a detailed preliminary plan which was compatible with the proposal submitted by the planning board. For the first time, the MBTA studied and considered issues such as public policy and objectives, environment, public safety, accessibility, traffic, ridership, noise and cost. The MBTA was supportive and cooperative with town agencies in preparing an excellent preliminary plan for a village station.

Cohasset shops and businesses would benefit from the increased activity in the village. Many residents would be able to walk to the train. No one could walk to a station on 3A. The projected increase in ridership with a village station means fewer cars on the highway. There are fewer environmental issues at the village location. The station platform would be located so that a stopped train would not block any streets needed by the fire and police departments. Trains would be operating at sharply reduced speeds when crossing downtown streets and streets that serve the schools. A train station on 3A would only exacerbate traffic conditions on an already over-utilized road.

SELECTMAN/ Michael Sullivan

The village train station is a difficult issue. There are taxpayers who feel it would revitalize the village, others who feel it would destroy the village.

Inherent in the question of impact to the village are such factors as traffic, speed of the train, impact on the surrounding neighborhoods, esthetics, safety, convenience, right of ways, land takings peace of mind and the potential for a fundamental change to the character of our village.

All must be taken into account. In the past, general town sentiment opposed having a village train station. Consequently, I believe, the issue hasn't been fully researched. Similarly, it was difficult to do an adequate traffic study when it was unclear where other stations would be located. Past statements also indicated that an 800-foot handicap accessible station would be required. Recent comments have suggested some flexibility on this issue.

There is a town meeting and selectmen's vote on record to locate the station on 3A. If the selectmen vote to reconsider I suggest that an extensive study be conducted resulting in a referendum question on the ballot.

Should we reconsider a village train station it should be for the last time. Individuals who will be significantly impacted have been hampered by the lack of finality on the issue for too long.

SELECTMAN/ Leland Jenkins

Downtown Cohasset is different than most towns in the area. It has a beautiful commons overlooking Little Harbor and on the other end a small, unique retail area. Through a unanimous vote of the planning board, the issue of whether or not the train should stop in the center of town is before us again. When it last ran we had a quaint little station and one stepped up to board. Today, with ADA regulations, we are required to build long platforms similar to ones in Randolph and Weymouth.

The platforms, traffic, parking and track realignment are concerns that have to be looked at very carefully due to the permanence of the structure. Once it is up, it is up forever. Will an 800-foot platform, the length of three football fields, fit into the natural surroundings of the area? How will the downtown be impacted with a lot for 300 additional cars? How will the increased traffic affect school buses and general movement around town? These concerns have to be answered, with a three-dimensional model available so everyone can actually visualize the physical effect.

A train station in our village is not a guarantee that it will bring new business or desired revitalization. We must take our time and carefully study all aspects again. Currently I am skeptical about the downtown location, but until I see working drawings and a model, until all the facts are in, I can't form an intelligent decision on something this important.

Planning board: Should the village train station be resurrected? Why or why not?

PLANNING BOARD/ Randy Patterson

Should the Greenbush rail line come to Cohasset, I would only support its downtown location provided the location is where the town's residents want it. I fully support placing this issue on the ballot at the upcoming town meeting and letting the residents decide its location. This siting is a once in a lifetime opportunity, and regardless if this question was asked three years ago, it is prudent to again ask the town to decide its location.

My decision would be to have it located along Route 3A for the following reasons:

Ample Parking. Without question, there has to be ample parking for users of the train. If commuters find no parking spaces to park, the intent and purpose of the train station will be missed. From the drawings I have seen, finding ample parking downtown will be a problem.

Increased traffic. The village station would increase traffic, effecting both local businesses and the surrounding residential neighborhoods. It would appear the Route 3A location is a natural location given that daily commuters flock to Route 3A to get into Boston.

On a larger scale, I believe the environmental impact of the Greenbush rail line to Cohasset and its neighboring towns far exceeds any potential benefits it would bring. Given that this line will have more grade crossings than any other rail line in the United States speaks for itself. Other alternatives should be considered and include expanding the commuter boat service, and having the train end in Weymouth.

PLANNING BOARD/ Chris Ford

I support the concept of a village train station. While I continue to have reservations on the overall question of restoration of rail service I strongly feel that if there is to be a train coming through Cohasset it is only logical that it should be conveniently accessed. To have to drive to North Scituate or to the Hingham border on Rte 3A is not convenient for the majority of Cohasset residents. Also, if the train is required to stop at a village location it means that the rate of speed though the heart of the village will be reduced thereby mitigating noise and vibration as the train passes through the center of the community.

A vital village business district is essential to the vibrancy of this community. A village train stop can only enhance this vitality. The Cohasset village center that I can recall from the 50's was a much more vibrant economy than it is today and I must conclude that the then village train station and the activities surrounding it must have had something to do with that vitality. Many issues will have to be addressed — parking especially — but I believe these are all surmountable and that a proper balance addressing the various concerns of the town can be achieved.

School committee: The school committee recently was shocked to learn the SPED deficit is much larger than expected. What's wrong with this picture?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Rick Flynn

The SPED budget has been level funded over the past couple of years, unfortunately it continues to grow. As a result the school committee is forced to deal with larger and larger SPED deficits.

What's wrong with this picture seems to be two things. Firstly, it's extremely difficult to predict SPED costs. Based on what students move in or out of the Cohasset school system can severely impact SPED costs. Also the number of students in the system requiring SPED can be very dynamic. As a result, the ability of the school committee to predict the growth of the SPED budget is not easy. By level funding the SPED budget, in an era of continual budget constraints, the school committee is trying to do its best to maintain the general education budget. To avoid the SPED budget shocks, the school committee may be better off to build in some growth expectations to this budget.

The second part of this picture that seems to be broken is the SPED process itself. State assistance versus state mandates do not match up. We need to somehow wring more SPED funding from the state. At the same time we may have to reexamine how we are currently operating some of are own programs. Can we find any cost efficiencies to doing more testing or teaching in house? Would increased training of our own teachers and aides help us stretch out SPED dollars? Most would agree SPED is a worthwhile program. However, given the costs and budget constraints we are all dealing with something has to give.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Chartis Tebbetts

The School Committee should not be looking at an unexpected budget deficit at this point into the school year. It is especially discouraging that the deficit is in a program area where deficits occur routinely. A different way of financing special education needs to be found and instituted, so that every program in the school department budget can expect to receive the funds allocated at the outset of the fiscal year, not be raided to cover these costs. Managers, who are held accountable for staying within budget, need to be sure they will actually receive the money allocated to their programs.

I will work with staff and other committee members to continue their efforts to get the Special Education budget funded without disrupting the careful planning of our total budget.

The League of Women Voters is in the third year of a comprehensive study of Special Education, and I expect to be able to bring much of their research and recommendations to this process. The League has identified three key questions about Special Education. They are: "What should be the goals of publicly funded special education?" "Are the current standards for participation in special education programs appropriate?" "How should Special Education in Massachusetts be funded?" The question about funding comes at a time when the larger issue of the funding of public education is putting great pressure on local, state and federal governments. The needs of every student are important, and we must not pit special education against regular education.

Possible cut from here down:

All students should be educated to reach their full individual potential so that they can become as productive as possible and contribute their unique talents.

Currently the state mandates that we provide tests, services, and programs for all our students. Providing for all can sometimes put a great burden on certain school systems. This responsibility needs to be shared by all, not just in Massachusetts, but throughout the country. Our public schools and our commitment to the education of all is one of the foundations of our successful democracy.

Library trustee: With the Internet bringing the world to the library, the Old Colony Network system and a great library down the road in Hingham, why does little Cohasset need a larger library facility?

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Patience Towle

The Town of Cohasset needs a better and larger library because a good small town library is on one floor, is easily staffed, has flexible space for books, computers, historical material, books on tape, videos, meetings, programs for children and adults and efficient staff work space. In addition, it has decent parking and is handicapped accessible. It provides, in a way tailored to its own community, a place for all ages to browse, read, access the Internet and to exchange information.

These needs are not filled by the OCLN or by the libraries of neighboring towns. The OCLN is a support mechanism that allows libraries to be more selective and organized in their book purchases. It helps libraries keep from sinking under the sheer volume of the 30,000 books published each year. We at Cohasset purchase only about 3,000 books each year and try to weed almost as many.

The Town of Hingham's $6 million addition and renovation is exciting and when completed will be an asset as a neighbor and as a member of the OCLN. It is not a substitute for a public library in Cohasset.

As chair of both the building committee and the full board of library trustees, I have worked with the library director, Janet Husband, our architects, our staff, and members of the community, many town boards, and the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners and we are confident our new library is just the right size.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Agnes McCann

Computers are great, but they do not save space and do not replace book-borrowing. It also helps to remember that in moving the library to a new location, it is not simply more space that is gained, it is different space.

In our hoped-for new space, the combined effect of additional square footage and one-floor living is going to make it possible to offer more programs, meeting places, study rooms and parking for the public; and increased and more efficient office space for the staff to handle our volume, including OCLN loans.

Finally, in my opinion, a free public library is a cornerstone of civilized community life, and I think Cohasset residents deserve the best one Cohasset can have.

More space will help — OCLN makes available to Cohasset residents for borrowing the books in every member town's collection, and computers are great, but they are not space-savers, and are not a substitute for book borrowing.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Carol Riley

As the editor of American Libraries wrote recently, "asking a librarian if computers make libraries obsolete is like asking Picasso if he doesn't think photography has pretty much killed painting." Research shows that public libraries are the number-one point of online access for people without Internet connections at home, school or work, and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library now offers free Internet access on three computers as well as assistance in making sense of what is accessed.

In a new, larger library there will be more Internet availability, as well as an expanded audio-book collection, a video collection, more large print books, more space for reference, for study, for meetings. Cohasset needs its own larger library because there is a need, a demand, a mandate from the Commonwealth, for a library that is handicap accessible, with ample parking so that the entire community can make use of this public facility.

"Little Cohasset" of course, has made great use of Hingham's fine library over the years, but I think it's time we improve our own by relocating to the beautiful old Osgood School at minimal cost to the town through almost certain state aid and generous private funding.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Lance Norris

I think it was Cicero who said, "A room without books is like a body without a soul", and towards that end: a library is the soul of a community.

Cohasset is not some soulless place to sleep between trips to Boston for work, dropping the kids off at the Hingham Library, and shopping in Scituate.

While the Internet may bring the world to your doorstep, it is still nothing more than a tool. Even the finest tools in the world are no good in the hands of people who don't know how to use them. A fully modern library must embrace the Internet as another valuable resource.

Next week's questions

For selectman and planning board candidates: Could you support Paul Barry's proposal for a transfer station at Cohasset Heights?

For school committee candidates: If the new school project goes ahead, sixth-graders will be moved to the middle-high school. Are some parents' concerns justified that sixth-graders are too young to be in the same building with high school students?

For library trustee: What can the library do to protect its youngest patrons from the dangers of the Internet?

Answers must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Responses, which must be no more than 250 words, may be e-mailed to mford@cnc.com, sent by fax to 741-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. For more information, call Mary Ford 741-2933. Candidates, opposed or unopposed are welcome to submit photos and formal announcements of their candidacies. The Mariner will also publish a candidates corner which is limited to a few lines from any candidate who wishes to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like. The Mariner would also like to hear from any write-in candidates for open seats on the board of health, recreation commission and housing authority. Candidates are encouraged to advertise their campaigns in the Mariner by contacting Bill Murphy at 781-

Cohasset skiers finish 12th in the state

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset varsity ski team capped off its season with five out of 10 team members competing in the annual MIAA State Championships held in Shalamont, Mass. At the Championships, 24 schools were represented by 300 of the top male and female skiers in the state.

In the State competitions, either full teams or individuals can qualify.

The Cohasset High boys team, which narrowly missed being included as an entire team, sent senior co-captains Greg O'Keefe and Andrew McAuliffe, as well as sophomore David Krueger.

The girls team also did not compete as a team, but co-captain Caitlin Stansell and freshman Maura McKenny took part in the race.

Each racer competed in two events: the slalom, which took place in the morning, and giant slalom, which took place in the late afternoon. Though no Cohasset participant finished in the top ten, Cohasset as a team finished 12th out of 24.

The Cohasset skiing program, which was cut from the school budget a year ago, has made a comeback thanks to the team members, who paid hefty user fees, and to coaches Jack Dane and Bob Stansell, who gave their coaching paychecks to support the program.

"We had a pretty successful season, considering we were totally self-funded," said Caitlin Stansell.

Prior to the state championships, Cohasset had five races against the other four teams in the 'small school' Division of the Mass Bay Ski League. These other schools are Easton, Westwood, Dover-Sherborn, and Milton.

The other members of the Cohasset team are: senior co-captain Stefan Vanderweil, juniors Lydia Guild and Susan Dane, and sophomores, Connor Avery and Alex Schmidt.

The future looks bright for the ski team, with seven eighth graders eagerly awaiting next winter to join the varsity team. (They could not compete this year due to age regulations.)

"We saw a lot of enthusiasm from the middle schoolers," said Stansell. "They couldn't compete, but they came to all the practices... and they are all pretty strong skiers."

The eighth graders who showed up for practice are Alanna Hughes, Brenna O'Donnell, Malcolm Stansell, Rob Carpenter, Andrew Buske and Kelly Hurley.

The stars will be shining tonight

It's back on.

The South Shore-Patriot League All Star game, originally scheduled for Feb. 18, will be played tonight (Thursday).

The game was canceled because of a snowstorm, and with teams trying to close out the regular season and preparing for the tournament, a decision was made to cancel the night all together rather than postpone it.

However, now that the tournament is down to the final weekend, and only the Rockland girls remain in competition, the game was rescheduled for tonight at Norwell High, with the girls tipping off at 6 p.m., and the boys following at 8 p.m. There will also be a three-point contest.

"It gives the kids a chance to be noticed and recognized for making the all-star team."
Scituate AD Jeff Granatino

Cohasset's Khalil Madyun was named to the South Shore team.

"It gives the kids a chance to be noticed and recognized for making the all-star team," said Scituate AD Jeff Granatino. "Norwell really wanted to go through with it. It draws a good crowd. When we had the snowstorm, we decided to wait until after the tournament. Last week at the Athletic Directors' meeting, we decided to have it this week since only the Rockland girls won't be playing."

Teams from both leagues have kept busy in the tournament.

The Scituate boys, whom Coasset defeated at the beginning of the year, entered the last week of the season to win both games to qualify for the tournament, but Hanover handed the Sailors a 79-62 loss to end any hopes of a tourney appearance. The Indians went on to the Div. 3 South tourney and lost a heartbreaking, 76-74 first round game in overtime at Martha's Vineyard.

Patriot League champion Rockland defeated Scituate in the final game of the season to sweep the series. The Bulldogs advanced to the Div. 3 South sectional semifinals with wins over Foxboro, 65-64 in the first round, and Canton, 77-72 in the quarterfinals. Rockland was then bounced from the tournament by Cardinal Spellman, 62-51.

The Cardinals went on to win the South Sectional championship with a thrilling 55-53 win over South Shore League Champion Norwell. The Clippers cruised into the finals with a 66-51 win over Bishop Connolly in the first round, a 101-72 victory over Martha's Vineyard in the quarterfinals, and an 86-68 win over Ashland in the semifinals.

East Bridgewater, which finished third in the Patriot League, also competed in Div. 3, knocking off Fairhaven, 54-47 in the first round before bowing to Ashland, 58-45. Carver, the third-place finisher in the South Shore League, fell just short of upsetting Spellman, losing 61-59 in the first round.

Hingham, which took second in the Patriot League, played Dorchester in the first round of the Div. 2 tourney, and lost 74-45. Fourth place Patriot League finisher Mashpee rolled all the way to the sectional finals of the Div. 4 tourney before losing to Avon, 53-51. They defeated Chatham 60-42 in the first round, South Shore Voke 81-67 in the quarterfinals, and Harwich 76-56 in the semifinals.

Hull, which took fourth in the South Shore League, advanced to the Div. 4 quarterfinals with a first round win over Diman, 72-62. Avon then eliminated Hull with a 74-65 win.

The local girls' squads were also successful.

Second-place Patriot League finisher Hingham lost to Franklin, 65-58 in the first round, while Randolph lost to Milton, 49-29, in the preliminary round.

Rockland took the Div. 3 title, opening with a 75-40 win over Archbishop Williams. The Bulldogs then defeated Norwell in the quarterfinals, 76-61. The Clippers had finished second in the South Shore League and knocked off East Bridgewater, the third place finisher in the Patriot League, 50-37.

Abington succumbed to Rockland in the semifinals, 42-35. The Green Wave had an impressive run with a 56-45 win over Wareham in the first round, and a 55-52 road win over Old Rochester in the quarterfinals.

Rockland defeated Foxboro, 57-54 to take the South title, and followed up with a 68-44 thrashing of Chelsea at the FleetCenter on Monday, and will play for the state championship at Worcester on Saturday.

Will Maich named to Seadogs

Will Maich

Cohasset resident Will Maich has recently been named as an early selection to the 2000 South Shore Baseball Club Seadogs 13 and under division AAU travel team baseball program, as announced by the SSBC in Holbrook. As a member of the Seadogs, Maich will compete against other AAU organizations in Mass. for the right to appear in the AAU baseball national championships in August.

Maich is a seventh grader at Derby Academy amd played for the Cohasset Little League Cardinals, the Cohasset Little League champs of 1999. The Seadogs program is not intended to replace but rather supplement local league play.

AAU travel team baseball gives players, coaches and families the opportunity to travel and compete in a national tournament.

"Going to the National Championships is a thrill of a lifetime," says Steve Almonte, director of the Seadogs program.

The SSBC will field eight teams in 2000 from the 10-and-under to the 17-and-under division.

Bare Cove Power Squadron intalls new officers

Virginia B. Gray was installed a Commander of the Bare Cove Power Squadron for her third consecutive term at a recent "Change of Watch" dinner. Other local residents taking office include Executive Officer, Robert Brown, Hingham; lieutenants William Bell, Cohasset, William Dawson, East Bridgewater, and James Gorman, Hingham: administrative officer, Marie Ferrante, Quincy; secretary, Cynthia Madden, Weymouth, educational officer, James McIver, Hingham; Rules Commitee Chair, George Dolan, Scituate; and auditor William Wiseman, Hull. At-Large board members include J. Russell Wayland, Scituate; Norman R. Crawley and Raymond G. Walker, both of Hingham.

Hingham's Bare Cover Power Squadrons highest profile local activity is offering a fall and winter popular Public Boating Course. The current boating course, which just started, has over 60 students.

Under the direction of James Gorman, instruction includes boating safety, chart reading, fundamentals of coastal navigation and seamanship. While most of the students are local adults, these courses meet state requirements for certification of power boat operators between ages 12-16

Collins retiring after 35 years as an educator

Collins said the time was right to move on.

"It's an appropriate time for me," he said. "With the district facing some major issues, such as the renovation project and the accreditation process, it's the right time to get someone else in there. I hope the transition will be seamless."

Among the achievements in Collins' career have been the institution of block scheduling at the middle-high school and being able to make both the distinct middle school and high school concepts work within one building. He has also been a major player on the state and national levels in introducing education reform. For his reform work, he was named the 1995 Massachusetts Principal of the Year.

Assistant principal Jack DeLorenzo said his own career has been bolstered by working with Collins.

"Personally, working with him has been a tremendous opportunity to grow professionally," DeLorenzo said. "He brought a stability that was needed here. His biggest asset may be that he's not afraid to make decisions. He's just the consummate professional."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo is one of many adults in town who sat in Collins' English class at Cohasset High. He said Collins' combination of attributes will be difficult to replace.

"He's always been very well respected as a teacher, as a principal, and as a person," DeGiacomo said. "The intelligence and knowledge he's brought to his job have been so valuable to Cohasset, and they've always been tempered with a wonderful sense of humor. He's done a lot of great things, not only in Cohasset. His are big shoes to fill."

Malvey said he will be looking to maintain the stability Collins has brought to the job of middle-high school principal.

"If the renovation project goes through, we're going to need someone who can deal with a physical plant that's going to be upset," Malvey said. "It's going to be important to keep that stability over the next couple of years and have someone who can tackle the nuts-and-bolts issues."

As Collins finishes his last school year, he said it will be the faculty, staff, and students he'll miss the most.

"The people in general are what I'll miss most," he said. "I'll miss working with the kids. They're why you get into this business. About 22 of the folks that were here when I left in 1978 were still here when I came back in 1995. Those relationships won't end, but it'll be different because I won't see the people every day."

Diversity committee hosts 'No Place for Hate' speaker

By Leila Altholtz
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

"Each and every member of our nation has the right to live the American Dream. No one should feel uncomfortable or threatened anywhere because of their race, religion, sexual orientation, disability, gender, color, ethnicity. ...The face of society is changing everyday and with it so must our perceptions of one another. We must learn to live with respect for each other's differences. Imagine a world where we all look the same, act the same and think the same ...embracing diversity can enrich our lives and open our minds." — Anti-Defamation League

Since becoming a "No Place for Hate" community in January, Cohasset has taken steps to prove it is serious about combating and preventing prejudice and intolerance within the community.

"No Place for Hate" is a public proclamation of the community's commitment to combating racism, anti-Semitism and bigotry. The program is sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League. The requirement of the program is to implement at least four qualifying activities to become a "No Place for Hate" community.

The Cohasset Diversity Committee, the Cohasset METCO Committee and the Cohasset PSO have joined forces to get started with one of the activities by welcoming into the community an enlightening program with Miriam Jefferson from the National Coalition Building Institute, NCBI. The program, complete with an after-school workshop free to Cohasset faculty, is specifically designed to work with community leaders such as teachers, police, clergy, selectmen and women, school committee members and Cohasset Chamber of Commerce members to teach them basic bridge-building skills to combat prejudice.

The afternoon workshop runs from 3-5 p.m. and is open to Cohasset teachers and staff. The evening program will be from 7-9 p.m. and is free to all town residents. The event is scheduled for March 29 in the Cohasset Middle/High School. Each and everyone will thoroughly benefit from the experience.

The Cohasset Diversity Committee was formed in 1995 by a group of residents who saw the importance of helping prepare children and adults in the community for an increasingly diverse society. It was formed to encourage an environment of respect for one another as a community. The committee serves as a resource of information, facilitating education and promoting collaboration within the community. The committee has been very active for all of these years, organizing multicultural fundraisers and regularly sponsoring teachers and students to attend seminars such as "World of Difference." The committee funded a program titled "The Art of Black Dance and Music" at the high school and also brought in a speaker who gave a personal account of the Holocaust for the high school students. The committee sponsored a week-long intensive study of Japanese culture and dance with Nikki Hu and have sponsored a sixth-grade trip to the International Fair. Members often provide educational material to the schools.

The Diversity Committee has always worked very closely with the METCO Committee and together they have organized a celebration of Diversity Day. Jointly they have sponsored recitals by the Boston METCO students and every year they organize and sponsor a METCO dinner with more than 200 Boston and Cohasset families in attendance.

Currently the two committees are working to develop ideas for a more fully integrated before-school program. Presently, the KEDS children and the METCO children are attending two concurrent programs which is inconsistent with Cohasset's commitment to fully integrate the METCO students' educational and social experience into the community. They are also jointly working on a solution to the problem of not having a late bus for the METCO students. As it is now, METCO students are unable to participate in after school academic support programs, sports programs or social events. They are also working together to create a video to better inform the community about the METCO program. It will serve as a resource for potential host families and as a lobbying tool for increased state funding. The METCO program benefits not only the Boston children but also enhances the education of the Cohasset children and the video will hopefully serve to elicit more participation on the part of the community.

On March 24, the METCO Committee and the Diversity Committee are sending 9 teachers and staff to a METCO Directors Conference where they will attend workshops such as "Kids Can Talk About Race: Facilitating The Conversation" — a workshop for learning to create an antiracist classroom environment. As a result of the efforts of the committees, the Cohasset Middle/High School has worked hard to ensure major school or sports events do not conflict with religious holidays of all cultures and religions. The committee is also hoping to do a handicap awareness program for the younger grades.

The Diversity Committee is presently funded by international cookbook sales, community donations and a portion of their budget is donated by the PSO. If anyone has time to come to a meeting, help with a project, share ideas or to just make a donation as it is very much needed, call Susan Etkind at 383-6602 or Connie Afshar at 383-6006.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

At Symphony Hall

Khalil Madyun and Liz Hassan, both seniors at Cohasset High School, will be performing in the Massachusetts All State Festival on March 18 at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Madyun, an accomplished tenor vocalist who composes his own songs will sing in the chorus. Hassan, who chose the trombone as her main instrument two and a half years ago, will be performing with the band.

As part of the festival, Hassan will also perform on March 16 with the South Shore Youth Wind Ensemble a highly selective Duxbury based group. They were the only high school band selected to perform at the festival.

On March 17, she will perform with the Honors Brass Quintet, a South Shore Conservatory group. Both Madyun and Hassan are planning on studying music at the college level.

Math & Science night

Math and Science night will be held for K-3 grade students and their families at the Osgood School Cafeteria on March 30, Thursday, 6:30-8 p.m. for grades 2-3.

Various math and science activities will be conducted to help make learning fun for the children and their families!

Neighbors want unsightly sewer plant shingled soon

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Even the sewer commission agrees the new treatment plant is ugly.

"It's an eyesore, there's no question about it," said commissioner Henry Rattenbury.

But that agreement was no consolation to more than a dozen abutters and concerned citizens who packed the sewer commission meeting room Monday to air their concerns.

Recently the girders went up and the siding went on giving the structure — which sits in the salt marsh off Elm Street — shape, form and size.

Howie Altholtz of Summer Street, spokesman for the neighbors, said seeing the siding go up heightened their sense of concern.

"As the skin is up, our concerns have been realized with respect to view and quality of life issues," he said.

This was the second meeting at which the issue was addressed. Late last year, the neighbors thought that the commission agreed to immediately "reshaping the aesthetics" to make the structure fit better into the marsh and surrounding properties, Altholtz said.

"It's an eyesore, there's no question about it."
— sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury.

But commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said that improvements to the building would have to wait until the plant is finished and the amount of available money from the sewer project contingency fund could be determined — a process that might take a year. He estimated covering the siding with shingles and adding landscaping could cost as much as $200,000. There is about $600,000 in the contingency fund that must pay for unforeseen expenses, project cost overruns and police details. The sewer commission won't know for five-to-six months how much of the contingency fund would be available, Vanderweil said. If there isn't enough, then additional funding for the aesthetics project could go before the fall or spring town meeting, he said.

Nevertheless concerned neighbors and residents want the process to move more quickly. They agreed to work closely with the sewer commission and project engineer to see what could be worked out, especially regarding the yearlong warranty on the siding that could be jeopardized by covering it up with another exterior layer.

Gary Gardner of Beechwood Street, who is not an abutter, said the plant's appearance affects the entire town.

"I drove by St. Anthony's and looked through the parking lot and saw the new structure there and said, 'Wow, what's this,'" he said. Gardner said the sewer plant needs to fit better into its context in the salt marsh.

"It affects more than the immediate residents in the neighborhood," he said.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Border St. hookup

The Jennifer and Robert Wilms at 169 Border St. would like to tear down an existing cottage on their property; use the existing home as a guest cottage and build a larger home on the parcel. Jennifer Wilms asked the sewer commission Monday for permission to connect the proposed guest cottage and new home to the sewer.

Commissioners, who said the sewer district has limited capacity, granted approval contingent on a filing with the registry of deeds stipulating the guest cottage would be used intermittently. The guest house and new family home must be hooked up to the same grinder pump in keeping with a precedent the sewer commission established with a guest house connection in North Cohasset, chairman Gary Vanderweil said.

Wilms said the cottage would only be used for overflow guests.

Sewer abatements

Sewer commissioners said that condominium developments, such as 100 Pond Street, with private wastewater collection systems that are connected to the town sewer can apply for a reduction in sewer betterment charges.

"The abatement will reflect the capital costs the town has avoided by not installing that system," chairman Gary Vanderweil said.

For example, the betterment cost for 100 Pond Street should reflect the costs of installing sewer mains along Pond Street and treatment plant expenses but not the pipes inside the condo complex or pumping station, that were paid for by the homeowners.

In a related matter, the sewer commission denied the condominium's request to take over maintenance of the 100 Pond Street system.

"Our logic is that the user fee takes care of ongoing maintenance," said Calvin King of 100 Pond Street. "Then the user fee should cover us like everyone else."

Member Henry Rattenbury said he surveyed area towns and could not find any that took over the operation and maintenance of private systems.

So the homeowners at 100 Pond Street want a reduction in their operating and maintenance fees charged by the sewer department.

The sewer commission also denied that request.

"We're surprised the user fee for 100 Pond Street stays the same," King said.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Selectmen shut door on the village train station

the station on 3A.

"This was not a hasty decision," McMorris said. "We spent a lot of hours listening to both sides."

The only new information presented to selectmen was the results of a recent survey of Cohasset Chamber of Commerce members concerning the location of the station.

Chamber of Commerce president David Drinkwater said only two questions were asked in the survey, which was returned by 57 business owners, representing both 3A and the village.

"We asked 'Are you in favor of the train?' and 'Which location is preferable to you,'" Drinkwater said. "51 percent chose a village location and 46 percent chose 3A for the location of the station."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the results of the survey showed something less than a mandate for the village station.

"There doesn't seem to be a burning desire among business owners for the village station, and that's who it's supposedly going to help the most," Sullivan said.

Dean Rizzo, who has headed up village revitalization efforts, said the newly-formed nonprofit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation plans to hire an independent firm to do an analysis of the impacts of a commuter rail station in the village and on 3A.

"We want to get the information out there and let the chips fall where they may," Rizzo said.

A straw poll of residents at the Oct. 1996 special town meeting found residents in favor of the 3A station by a margin of 311-112.

Peter Pratt, who was a selectman at the time, said the result of the poll makes it clear that residents do not support a village station.

"You're asking us for our support for underground utilities," Pratt said. "You have to reach out to us in partnership. We are your customers, your closest neighbors, and we don't want a village station. The money that's going to revitalize the village is going to come from us. Stop trying to impose something on us we simply don't want."

Cohasset Mitigation Committee chairman Tom Gruber said the T is likely to move forward with definite plans for the 3A station before a study could be completed.

"Very, very shortly, the chances of moving the station will be zero," Gruber said. "The T is undergoing its last permitting process and is looking at a May or June timeframe for it to be completed. Once the permitting is finished, the t is going to move as fast as their chubby little legs will take them."

Moore said the issue of where to put the station should be a ballot initiative, to let the town vote on it once and for all.

"I don't envy this board," he said. "Where to put the station is the most important decision which will have been made in this town in the last 50 years and it may be in the next 50 years as well. One thing that would make us happy is to put it on a ballot. If the majority rules, so be it."

McMorris resisted the notion of putting the issue on a ballot.

"The people on this board were on a ballot and were elected," she said. "Every time we make a decision people don't agree with, should we put it on a ballot?"

Vanderweil estimated there are about 100 vacant lots in the district of which 35-40 could be built on. Of those, owners of about 10-15 lots have applied for sewer connections over the past year, he said. About 700 new connections are being added to the existing 300 in the district as part of the sewer expansion project.

The five homes that make up Olde Farm Hill are outside the central district. Acting on a citizens' petition article at the fall special town meeting, voters did approve including Olde Farm Hill in the central district but town counsel said decisions on sewer boundaries rest with the sewer commission.

So the homeowners submitted another article for the March 25 annual town meeting asking to be given priority over the vacant lots.

As it stands now, the sewer commission will hold any further requests for potential hook-ups to the vacant lots in abeyance until town meeting votes, Vanderweil said.

On March 3, the sewer commission sent a letter to property owners of vacant lots in the district warning them that the upgraded sewer plant has limited capacity. The letter stated that, if town meeting approves the article giving Olde Farm Hill priority, the sewer commissioners would not approve connections for proposed buildings on vacant lots until performance of the plant establishes that adequate capacity exists.

Sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury said giving Olde Farm Hill priority isn't fair.

"I feel for the vacant lot owners who have waited 25-30 years and have paid their taxes and were told they would have the ability to hook up and now, all of a sudden someone steps in, in front of them," he said. "I don't think it's fair."

But the Olde Farm Hill homeowners have argued that they have no alternative. After two septic systems failed on their property, they do not want to sink an estimated $70,000 into a third system, with no guarantee of success. So far, they've spent about $65,000 in pumping fees, consultants, legal fees, new pipes and a French drain for groundwater runoff that didn't solve the problem since the second septic system failed there two years ago.

The homeowners have offered to pay the costs of connecting to the sewer system and for any easements that might be required.

If town meeting puts Olde Farm Hill ahead of the vacant lots, the condos could be connected to the sewer in June. When fully upgraded the sewer plant will have capacity of 300,000 gallons per day. Currently, its capacity is 72,000 gallons per day. Olde Farm Hill produces about 1,300 gallons a day of wastewater.

Olde Farm Hill is an old estate on about eight acres off Rte. 3A whose buildings have been converted into individual homes.

Plan for Straits Pond floated

breeding ground for midges," Lemnios said.

Lemnios said the Hull side of Straits Pond is now connected to its municipal sewer system. The homes on the Cohasset side of Straits Pond are scheduled to be hooked to the Cohasset sewer system within a few weeks.

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, selectman Fred Koed said packets would be sent to homes in the North Cohasset Sewer District in approximately two weeks to explain the process to connect to the town sewer.

"The septic problem seems to be working itself out, and that should have some positive effect in the upcoming years," Lemnios said. "The biodiversity of the pond has been improving."

Straits Pond is one of 27 places in the state designated as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC). Anson Whealler, 619 Jerusalem Road, said the designation accelerated the sewer project in North Cohasset.

"If Straits Pond were not an ACEC, there's a very good chance the Cohasset side would not have been sewered," Whealler said.

The towns of Cohasset and Hingham have been working together to reduce the population of midges on Straits Pond. The towns are in the last year of a second 3-year-term to apply an insecticide called Abate ISG to the pond. The insecticide is sprayed once per year.

Bob McCunney, 685 Jerusalem Rd., said the growth of algae, whose blooms ultimately feed midges, needs to be dealt with or the midges will inevitably return.

"We need to think beyond the midges," McCunney said. "The academic solution would be to increase the depth of the pond. In summer, when the depth is low, the sun penetrates and increases photosynthesis."

Watershed Association president Lawry Reid said a task force should be created to look for solutions and report back to the group at large.

"The task force can put together a history of the problems at Straits Pond, and come up with a set of goals," Reid said.

The task force is to include the Hull and Cohasset conservation agents, a representative from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, a representative from the state Department of Environmental Protection, as well as three citizen members from both Hull and Cohasset. The task force will report back to the Watershed Association at the group's May 15 meeting.

Lemnios said residents of the Straits Pond watershed should not be expecting a quick fix to the area's ills.

"It's heartening to see a group of people interested in improving the pond," he said. But because this is an ACEC, this is going to take some time. Any program which impacts the pond will go through multiple layers of review."

Donations sought for utility vehicle

The Cohasset Police Department recently acquired a 1985 four-wheel drive Chevy Blazer with 28,000 original miles on it from the military at no cost to the taxpayers of Cohasset, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

The vehicle is currently camouflaged in color, and needs some body work. The town has no funding available to have this vehicle painted and equipped as a "Police Special Operations Vehicle." This utility vehicle will be equipped with blue lights, siren, and a two-way radio, Noonan said.

" Our goal is to raise $5000 to complete this important project," he said. "Once completed, the vehicle would be used to support our current community policing efforts in the areas of mountain bike patrol, drug enforcement, marine patrols, and search and rescue."

This vehicle could also be used for special needs such as, when a winter storm hits and there is a need for four-wheel drive. Until this point, the police department has not had a four-wheel drive vehicle.

"Over the years, the town has been hit by severe ocean storms, blizzards, and other natural disasters," Noonan said.. "When an event like this occurs, it is almost impossible to access some areas of town without four-wheel drive.

This is the Chevy Blazer the police want to refurbish

"There have been times when police officers have had to use their personal 4x4 vehicles to assist citizens who were trapped and cut off from help during storms. The simple truth is that when a storm hits, some parts of Town become inaccessible to regular police cruisers due to hazardous road and weather conditions," Noonan said.

"This four-wheel drive Blazer is built to military specifications and once added to the fleet will assist in emergency operations and undoubtedly be an asset to saving lives and attending to those in need," he said.

Donations may be sent to the Cohasset Police Department, 62 Elm St., Cohasset 02025 attn. blazer fund.

Detective to talk about drugs

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee will sponsor a talk for parents and youths on "Drugs in the Community," by Detective Gregory Lennon, Drug Officer for the Cohasset Police Department, at the Teen Garage on Parking Way in Cohasset on Wednesday, March 22, from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. For any additional information, call 383-0851.

Cohasset has comparable issues around drug and alcohol abuse as any other community. On the South Shore 88 percent of the youth interviewed have stated that alcohol was easy to get through an adult and that illegal drugs are readily available. This evening's presentation is a positive step that parents and youth can take to be informed.

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee is organized to increase consciousness concerning the use and abuse of chemical substances in the community. The committee began a confidential telephone access to a drug and alcoholism counselor for information and referral (383-4120). An additional confidential tips hot line (383-9406) was put in place to refer leads on illegal drug activity to the police department. The committee is working to publish a parents' handbook on substance abuse and prevention. Concern about tobacco use has also been on the committee's agenda.

Be sure to attend this important presentation on "Drugs in the Community" by Detective Lennon on Wednesday, March 22, at 7:30 p.m. at the Teen Garage (located behind the Red Lion Inn) in Cohasset.

Selectmen shut door on the village train station

the station on 3A.

"This was not a hasty decision," McMorris said. "We spent a lot of hours listening to both sides."

The only new information presented to selectmen was the results of a recent survey of Cohasset Chamber of Commerce members concerning the location of the station.

Chamber of Commerce president David Drinkwater said only two questions were asked in the survey, which was returned by 57 business owners, representing both 3A and the village.

"We asked 'Are you in favor of the train?' and 'Which location is preferable to you,'" Drinkwater said. "51 percent chose a village location and 46 percent chose 3A for the location of the station."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the results of the survey showed something less than a mandate for the village station.

"There doesn't seem to be a burning desire among business owners for the village station, and that's who it's supposedly going to help the most," Sullivan said.

Dean Rizzo, who has headed up village revitalization efforts, said the newly-formed nonprofit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation plans to hire an independent firm to do an analysis of the impacts of a commuter rail station in the village and on 3A.

"We want to get the information out there and let the chips fall where they may," Rizzo said.

A straw poll of residents at the Oct. 1996 special town meeting found residents in favor of the 3A station by a margin of 311-112.

Peter Pratt, who was a selectman at the time, said the result of the poll makes it clear that residents do not support a village station.

"You're asking us for our support for underground utilities," Pratt said. "You have to reach out to us in partnership. We are your customers, your closest neighbors, and we don't want a village station. The money that's going to revitalize the village is going to come from us. Stop trying to impose something on us we simply don't want."

Cohasset Mitigation Committee chairman Tom Gruber said the T is likely to move forward with definite plans for the 3A station before a study could be completed.

"Very, very shortly, the chances of moving the station will be zero," Gruber said. "The T is undergoing its last permitting process and is looking at a May or June timeframe for it to be completed. Once the permitting is finished, the t is going to move as fast as their chubby little legs will take them."

Moore said the issue of where to put the station should be a ballot initiative, to let the town vote on it once and for all.

"I don't envy this board," he said. "Where to put the station is the most important decision which will have been made in this town in the last 50 years and it may be in the next 50 years as well. One thing that would make us happy is to put it on a ballot. If the majority rules, so be it."

McMorris resisted the notion of putting the issue on a ballot.

"The people on this board were on a ballot and were elected," she said. "Every time we make a decision people don't agree with, should we put it on a ballot?"

Vanderweil estimated there are about 100 vacant lots in the district of which 35-40 could be built on. Of those, owners of about 10-15 lots have applied for sewer connections over the past year, he said. About 700 new connections are being added to the existing 300 in the district as part of the sewer expansion project.

The five homes that make up Olde Farm Hill are outside the central district. Acting on a citizens' petition article at the fall special town meeting, voters did approve including Olde Farm Hill in the central district but town counsel said decisions on sewer boundaries rest with the sewer commission.

So the homeowners submitted another article for the March 25 annual town meeting asking to be given priority over the vacant lots.

As it stands now, the sewer commission will hold any further requests for potential hook-ups to the vacant lots in abeyance until town meeting votes, Vanderweil said.

On March 3, the sewer commission sent a letter to property owners of vacant lots in the district warning them that the upgraded sewer plant has limited capacity. The letter stated that, if town meeting approves the article giving Olde Farm Hill priority, the sewer commissioners would not approve connections for proposed buildings on vacant lots until performance of the plant establishes that adequate capacity exists.

Sewer commissioner Henry Rattenbury said giving Olde Farm Hill priority isn't fair.

"I feel for the vacant lot owners who have waited 25-30 years and have paid their taxes and were told they would have the ability to hook up and now, all of a sudden someone steps in, in front of them," he said. "I don't think it's fair."

But the Olde Farm Hill homeowners have argued that they have no alternative. After two septic systems failed on their property, they do not want to sink an estimated $70,000 into a third system, with no guarantee of success. So far, they've spent about $65,000 in pumping fees, consultants, legal fees, new pipes and a French drain for groundwater runoff that didn't solve the problem since the second septic system failed there two years ago.

The homeowners have offered to pay the costs of connecting to the sewer system and for any easements that might be required.

If town meeting puts Olde Farm Hill ahead of the vacant lots, the condos could be connected to the sewer in June. When fully upgraded the sewer plant will have capacity of 300,000 gallons per day. Currently, its capacity is 72,000 gallons per day. Olde Farm Hill produces about 1,300 gallons a day of wastewater.

Olde Farm Hill is an old estate on about eight acres off Rte. 3A whose buildings have been converted into individual homes.

Plan for Straits Pond floated

breeding ground for midges," Lemnios said.

Lemnios said the Hull side of Straits Pond is now connected to its municipal sewer system. The homes on the Cohasset side of Straits Pond are scheduled to be hooked to the Cohasset sewer system within a few weeks.

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, selectman Fred Koed said packets would be sent to homes in the North Cohasset Sewer District in approximately two weeks to explain the process to connect to the town sewer.

"The septic problem seems to be working itself out, and that should have some positive effect in the upcoming years," Lemnios said. "The biodiversity of the pond has been improving."

Straits Pond is one of 27 places in the state designated as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC). Anson Whealler, 619 Jerusalem Road, said the designation accelerated the sewer project in North Cohasset.

"If Straits Pond were not an ACEC, there's a very good chance the Cohasset side would not have been sewered," Whealler said.

The towns of Cohasset and Hingham have been working together to reduce the population of midges on Straits Pond. The towns are in the last year of a second 3-year-term to apply an insecticide called Abate ISG to the pond. The insecticide is sprayed once per year.

Bob McCunney, 685 Jerusalem Rd., said the growth of algae, whose blooms ultimately feed midges, needs to be dealt with or the midges will inevitably return.

"We need to think beyond the midges," McCunney said. "The academic solution would be to increase the depth of the pond. In summer, when the depth is low, the sun penetrates and increases photosynthesis."

Watershed Association president Lawry Reid said a task force should be created to look for solutions and report back to the group at large.

"The task force can put together a history of the problems at Straits Pond, and come up with a set of goals," Reid said.

The task force is to include the Hull and Cohasset conservation agents, a representative from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, a representative from the state Department of Environmental Protection, as well as three citizen members from both Hull and Cohasset. The task force will report back to the Watershed Association at the group's May 15 meeting.

Lemnios said residents of the Straits Pond watershed should not be expecting a quick fix to the area's ills.

"It's heartening to see a group of people interested in improving the pond," he said. But because this is an ACEC, this is going to take some time. Any program which impacts the pond will go through multiple layers of review."

Donations sought for utility vehicle

The Cohasset Police Department recently acquired a 1985 four-wheel drive Chevy Blazer with 28,000 original miles on it from the military at no cost to the taxpayers of Cohasset, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

The vehicle is currently camouflaged in color, and needs some body work. The town has no funding available to have this vehicle painted and equipped as a "Police Special Operations Vehicle." This utility vehicle will be equipped with blue lights, siren, and a two-way radio, Noonan said.

" Our goal is to raise $5000 to complete this important project," he said. "Once completed, the vehicle would be used to support our current community policing efforts in the areas of mountain bike patrol, drug enforcement, marine patrols, and search and rescue."

This vehicle could also be used for special needs such as, when a winter storm hits and there is a need for four-wheel drive. Until this point, the police department has not had a four-wheel drive vehicle.

"Over the years, the town has been hit by severe ocean storms, blizzards, and other natural disasters." Noonan said.. "When an event like this occurs, it is almost impossible to access some areas of town without four-wheel drive.

"There have been times when police officers have had to use their personal 4x4 vehicles to assist citizens who were trapped and cut off from help during storms. The simple truth is that when a storm hits, some parts of Town become inaccessible to regular police cruisers due to hazardous road and weather conditions," Noonan said.

"This four-wheel drive Blazer is built to military specifications and once added to the fleet will assist in emergency operations and undoubtedly be an asset to saving lives and attending to those in need," he said.

Donations may be sent to the Cohasset Police Department, 62 Elm St., Cohasset 02025 attn. blazer fund.

Detective to talk about drugs

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee will sponsor a talk for parents and youths on "Drugs in the Community," by Detective Gregory Lennon, Drug Officer for the Cohasset Police Department, at the Teen Garage on Parking Way in Cohasset on Wednesday, March 22, from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. For any additional information, call 383-0851.

Cohasset has comparable issues around drug and alcohol abuse as any other community. On the South Shore 88 percent of the youth interviewed have stated that alcohol was easy to get through an adult and that illegal drugs are readily available. This evening's presentation is a positive step that parents and youth can take to be informed.

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee is organized to increase consciousness concerning the use and abuse of chemical substances in the community. The committee began a confidential telephone access to a drug and alcoholism counselor for information and referral (383-4120). An additional confidential tips hot line (383-9406) was put in place to refer leads on illegal drug activity to the police department. The committee is working to publish a parents' handbook on substance abuse and prevention. Concern about tobacco use has also been on the committee's agenda.

Be sure to attend this important presentation on "Drugs in the Community" by Detective Lennon on Wednesday, March 22, at 7:30 p.m. at the Teen Garage (located behind the Red Lion Inn) in Cohasset.

Party politics on a small scale

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When residents went to the polls for the March 7 presidential primary, they likely knew who they were voting for. Whether it was Bush, McCain, Gore, or Bradley, most minds had likely been made up before the visit to the polls.

But what about the other 30 or 35 names on the ballot? If you had a Democratic or Republican ballot, you also had the opportunity to elect residents to your party's Democratic or Republican town committee.

By state law, each town in Massachusetts has a Republican and Democratic town committee, each of which may have up to 35 members. The town committees are elected every four years.

In a small town like Cohasset, both parties can have difficulty getting 35 people to run for the town committee.

"You have to beat the bushes sometimes to get 35," said selectman and Democratic state committee member Fred Koed, who also serves on the Democratic town committee. There's a big contrast between Cohasset and a town like Weymouth. In Weymouth, there are still only 35 slots, so the races are much more contested."

Koed said town committees serve as the active party leaders in a community.

"If someone's on a town committee, they're interested in politics," Koed said. "People who don't have time to follow politics in their busy lives will look to them as opinion leaders. Also, a lot of candidates look to them as the leadership in each town. They're not the only one, but they're a key constituency."

Town committees may be busier this year than in others with a race for incumbent State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's (R-Cohasset) open seat on the horizon.

"We'll have forums for candidates and raise money for candidates," said Republican town committee member Martha Gjesteby. "The committee itself is non partisan during the primary. After the primary, we'll make some calls and have people down at the polls."

In the Republican race for state representative, Hingham school committee member Maureen Devine is opposed by fellow Hingham resident Mary Ann McKenna. Gjesteby said the Cohasset Republican committee is in an unfamiliar position because Murray held the seat for so long.

"Mary Jeanette had her own organization made up of both Republicans and Democrats, and didn't really use the town committee," Gjesteby said. "Both the women are Hingham candidates, so it will be interesting to see what our role will be."

In the Democratic primary for state representative, former candidate Garrett Bradley, of Hingham, will face Hingham selectman Michael Holden. Koed said gaining a foothold in Cohasset will be vital to both.

"Garrett and Mike will have to make major inroads in Cohasset for the primary," he said. "Being from Hingham, it's important for them to get name recognition here and make themselves seen."

In addition to going to polls and making calls, the Republican town committee also sends out a card to all registered voters listing Republican candidates for president, state representative, state senator, as well as listing all referendum questions appearing on the ballot.

"I've seen independents and Democrats taking the cards into the polls so they know what they're voting on," Gjesteby said. "It's something we do as a service to the town."

The Democratic town committee also provides a service to the town in the form of a scholarship for graduating high school seniors.

In addition to grass-roots politics and community service, town committees also hold social events from time to time. The Republican town committee holds an annual picnic at the Jerusalem Road home of Ted and Julie Guild which has drawn some of the state's most important political figures, including Lt. Gov. Jane Swift last year.

""We've had a lot of fun throughout the years," Gjesteby said. "It's a real lively, grass-roots group."

CANDIDATES CORNER

LeClair candidacy

Democrat Ted LeClair, a native of Scituate and current Marshfield resident, announced his state senate candidacy for the Plymouth-Norfolk District which includes Cohasset and Hingham.

LeClair's campaign kick-off fund raiser was attended by more than 350 at the Weymouth Elks Hall.

LeClair, a local cranberry grower, said that public service had been a goal since he had represented Scituate High School at the Boys State Program years ago.

LeClair received his bachelor of arts degree from Villanova University and is a graduate degree candidate in government at Harvard University Extension Program.

He served as an officer in the United States Navy as a lieutenant on the USS Callaghan, a guided missile destroyer. During his tenure in the armed forces, LeClair served his country in the Persian Gulf between 1993-94. As a naval officer, he was awarded Navy Commendation and Navy Achievement medals. LeClair spent six months in Navy Seal training.

Following his national service, LeClair founded LeClair Brothers Cranberry Company, a supplier of cranberries to wholesalers and distributors. In addition, LeClair is part owner of Webster Cranberry Company. He is on the board of the Cape Cod Cranberry Growers' Association, the trade organization of more than 400 cranberry growers throughout the Commonwealth.

In addition to his professional responsibilities, LeClair serves as co-chairman of Massachusetts Boys State, an American Legion organization whose mission is to educate high school students about the workings of local, state, and federal government.

LeClair is a member of the American Legion and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. He is also an active member of St. Luke's Parish in Scituate and is a member of the Marshfield Democratic Town Committee.

Scituate's St. Patrick's Day parade steps off Sunday

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Everyone loves a parade.

Especially if it's Scituate's annual St. Patrick's Day parade, sponsored annually by the Scituate Chamber of Commerce. It's the biggest and most colorful south of Southie, and this year's event is being touted as the best ever.

"It's going to be unbelievable this year," said Nina Belsan, co-owner of Belsan's Bait and Tackle and also the publicity director for the chamber. "We have the attention this year, and we've been getting a lot of publicity out there about it."

Belsan said the parade begins at 1 p.m. on March 19, and will run from Gates Intermediate School on First Parish Road, all the way to Scituate Harbor.

Belsan noted she worked with officials from Abington for consultation purposes, as Abington is holding it's own St. Patrick's Day parade on March 17.

"We had to put on four more police units for this year's parade," Belsan said, "so it is getting bigger and better every year. I think people are extremely happy there's going to be another place to catch a parade other than South Boston."

Belsan there will be 20 units, or "parts" in the parade.

She said the units will consist of bands like the Boston City Band, The Boston Crusaders, and a bagpipe group as well.

She said there will be a number of local businesses represented by floats, and military units participating including a U.S. Army Reserve group.

In addition, there will be a float for the Scituate citizen of the year, the "rose" of Scituate, and also, a float for the Lord Mayor of the town.

This year represents the third year the Scituate Chamber of Commerce has sponsored the parade, but Belsan noted the annual tradition of the parade started in the early 1990's in Minot.

"It started several years ago," said Ellie Fisher, president of the Scituate Chamber of Commerce. "It eventually got too big and we took it over."

Minot natives Jim and Janet Campbell founded the St. Patrick's Day parade in town and ran it for five years before the chamber took over.

"We're really proud of it now," Jim said. "It was just getting too busy in Minot. The Chamber was just more equipped to handle it financially as well."

When Janet Campbell was asked what she thought of the parade's growth she joked "It's like moving from off-Broadway to Broadway!"

The Campbells both said they still are involved in the planning process of the parade, as they like to stay close to what they implemented years ago.

"We stay involved," Jim said, "because we enjoy watching it grow. To see what it's become, well it's just amazing."

"The parade always gets a good turnout because for a lot of people, it represents the coming of spring," Jim noted.

Jim said he and his wife initially thought of implementing a parade years ago in Minot because the section of town has long been known as the "Irish Rivera." The owners of Century Irish Items — a wholesale business selling Irish products to Irish specialty shops nationwide —the Campbell's were the perfect couple to start the indomitably Irish event

"The parade seemed like a great fit when we started it," he added, "and I think it still is."

Now, with the responsibility of the parade in the hands of the Chamber, Belsan said the annual event takes a great deal of planning.

Fisher noted each parade costs approximately $20,000, and the Chamber gets its financial resources through various fund raisers including last week's Mad Hatters Ball held at the Barker Tavern and the annual Lord Mayor race where residents pay a dollar per vote to elect the parade official.

Getting a parade going is a big job for everyone involved. "Every year I pray," Belsan said laughing. "You really have to start the planning at least four to five months in advance. We base out plans on what happened the year before. Publicity is definitely the key to getting people there."

Belsan said last year's parade was extremely successful and she said "this year should be great." She said next year's parade will most likely be "phenomenal."

"There's a lot of Irish pride around here," she said. "And it would be awful if we didn't have a parade around here. Everyone loves it. Where else can whole neighborhoods get together in one place other than town meeting? It is part of Scituate's identity now, and that is a result of the tremendous pride that exists around here."

"It's a good thing for the town," Fisher said. "It really starts spring off with a happy feeling."

Rice Pilaf

What is rice pilaf? Many folks think of rice dishes that contain lots of other ingredients – onion, vegetables, spices – but the key point is that the rice is sautéed briefly in butter or oil before being cooked. This gives the rice a lighter, fluffier quality that is superior to the usual back-of-the-box approach. The question was, what is the best method for turning out superior rice pilaf?

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I started by testing different varieties of rice. Most recipes use long-grain or basmati but I also tried medium-grain, jasmine, Korean, Japanese, Italian and so on. Since I was aiming for separate, fluffy grains, extra-long-grain and basmati were my favorites. The short-grain and medium-grain rices were too sticky for this recipe. Jasmine rice (my third favorite in the testing) is flavorful but not a common pantry item and stickier than long-grain or basmati.

There is a great deal of controversy about how the rice should be rinsed or soaked, steps which many pilaf recipes recommend. In fact, some recipes actually soak the rice for as long as overnight. When tested, I found that it was not worth the advance planning.

However, I also tried rinsing the rice and found that this does make the rice less sticky when cooked, presumably because excess starch is removed in the process. While a friend of mine from Thailand rinses her rice in a colander for several minutes, I realized I did not have sufficient experience to know when the rice was ready for cooking so I found that a bowl of water was a simpler method.

I placed the rice in a bowl and then covered it with cold water. Next, I swished it around with my fingers for about a minute and then poured off the water. With each rinse the water became less cloudy and when the water ran clear I knew the rice was well rinsed – free of dirt and excess starch. To finish this process I then drained the rice in a colander and proceeded with the rest of the recipe.

I then turned to the sautéing. I melted butter in a heavy saucepan and when the foaming stopped added the rice. The rice needs to sauté long enough for each grain to be coated with the fat. However, I found that I did not like the taste of browned butter or browned rice in this recipe so the rice needs to be stirred constantly and the cooking time should be kept to about two minutes. I tried using only two tablespoons of butter (instead of three) and found it was not enough to coat each grain. Using more than 3 tablespoons of butter made rice that tasted mostly of butter. I did, however, like the taste of rice made with 1 tablespoon olive oil and 2 tablespoons butter. The olive oil offered an extra touch of flavor to the finished dish.

Next, I had to test the amount and temperature of the liquid. In making risotto, I knew that the liquid needs to be boiling so that the rice cooks in one continuous process. This turned out not to be the case for this recipe. The rice made by adding boiling water or stock was indistinguishable from the rice made by adding room temperature or cool liquid.

I then compared rice made with chicken stock and rice made with water. The basmati rice is great either way but I preferred the extra-long-grain cooked in chicken stock, although water makes a perfectly good pilaf. I did want to see if the rice could cook in less liquid since it had been through several rinses of water but I found using 2 cups of water instead of the original 2 1/4 cups the rice still had a bit too much of a bite.

As with most rice recipes I did find letting the finished rice sit (covered) for a few minutes before serving does seem to set the flavors and make for a lighter texture. Ten minutes of resting was good but 15 minutes was even better. When served after sitting for less than 10 minutes, the rice was not as fluffy and an extended resting time offered no additional benefit.

Finally, I wanted to try adding a simple flavoring agent such as an aromatic vegetable so I tried 1/4-cup finely diced onion, which offered a nice flavor addition without dominating the rice. Next I tried a bit of garlic, which was overpowering. However, 1/4-cup shallot worked quite well. In my tests, I found that narrow saucepans were difficult to use; larger diameter saucepans make the initial stirring easier and allow for gentler handling of the rice. In addition the wider pan keeps the rice in the liquid for a longer period and the grains cook more evenly.

PERFECT RICE PILAF

This recipe uses only three ingredients—rice, liquid, and fat. A wide saucepan is better than a narrow one since it is easier to sauté the rice. Basmati is the rice of choice although any long-grain rice will do.

1 1/2 cups basmati, extra-long-grain or long-grain rice.
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1/4 cup shallot or onion finely diced
2 1/4 cups water or low sodium chicken broth or a combination of both
3/4 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Place the rice in a large bowl and cover by 2 inches with cold water. Swirl the rice with your hands, to help release the dirt and starch from the rice. Pour off the liquid. Repeat this process until the water remains clear. Drain rice in a mesh colander and set aside.

2. Place the butter and olive oil in a medium saucepan (preferably with a diameter of at least 8 inches) over medium-low heat. When the butter has stopped foaming add the shallot or onion and sauté for about 2 minutes or until it has started to soften and become translucent but not browned. Add the rice and sauté, stirring constantly, for two minutes. The rice should be evenly coated with the butter but not browned.

3. Add the water or chicken stock, salt, and a few grinds of pepper and stir briefly. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat as to allow the liquid to simmer, cover, and let cook until the liquid is absorbed, about 18 minutes. (Try not to remove the lid during this time). Remove from the heat and let sit remaining covered for an additional 10 to 15 minutes. Gently fluff with a fork and serve immediately. Serves 6 as a side dish.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15

The impact of a Cancer moon and Pluto station may bring up deep feelings, buried emotions this morning. Keep a cool head. Don't make waves. Pluto begins retrograde travel at 6:49 a.m., 12-degrees of Sagittarius. In addition, the moon forms a challenging alignment to volatile Mars at 7:16 a.m. Influences ease up, however, at 8:43 a.m., when the moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. Mercury and Venus come together at 2-degrees of Pisces, highlighting all artistic endeavors. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry, dance. An outgoing Leo moon arrives at 4:43 p.m.

THURSDAY, MARCH 16

Today's planetary combination of Leo moon and Jupiter/Neptune alignment generates an upbeat, optimistic mood. Know your limits, however. You may be tempted to take risks, gamble with your resources, spend money extravagantly. Be more cautious. Postpone acting on decisions for a few days. On the other hand, today's influences are prime for developing projects that need your imagination, creativity, ingenuity.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17

Planetary activity this week has been challenging, unsettling. A full moon continues to build up, adding high energy and intensity. However, today's planetary picture holds potential for an exciting, successful day. The playful Leo moon continues active travel until 1:07 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be most productive. A Virgo moon takes over at 7:48 p.m., beginning the final windup to this month's full moon. An applying alignment of Venus and Jupiter prompts you to let fun and games top your agenda.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18

This weekend can go either way. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Don't let anyone or anything throw you off track. All full moon warnings are in effect. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Channel high energy constructively. Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects. You can be most productive. Sidestep impulsive, compulsive behavior between 4:02 and 7:02 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto.

SUNDAY, MARCH 19

This is not a typical, laidback Sunday. A full moon builds up until 11:44 p.m. and culminates at the tail end of the sign Virgo. This is also the last full day of winter. The Vernal Equinox arrives tomorrow. Plan a busy day. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Fulfill promises; repay debts. Take better care of yourself. Start new programs to break bad habits. Get back on track with physical fitness, exercise routines. Take quiet time out for yourself; for soul-searching, examining values and setting new goals. At 11:57 p.m. a Libra moon takes over.

MONDAY, MARCH 20

This week has its ups and downs. Potentially stormy astrological weather arrives midweek but clears out Friday. Today the Vernal Equinox arrives at 2:35 a.m., when the sun enters Aries. The Libra moon forms a harmonious contact to Neptune in the morning and Pluto in the evening. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

TUESDAY, MARCH 21

A Libra moon all day places the focus on people-related activities. You can make gains developing projects that need advice or support from others. It is okay to launch new projects before 10:24 a.m., when the Libra moon aligns with Uranus. However, it is best to postpone major decisions and purchases until Friday afternoon, when more favorable influences occur. Zero in on relationship issues. Now is the time to redress the balance in personal or professional relationships that have become too one-sided for comfort.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22

A Libra moon becomes inactive at 5:26 a.m. until 6:17 a.m., when a Scorpio moon takes over. Prepare for a challenging 2-day period. The focus remains on partners and relationship matters. If you've been experiencing problems with another, it's time to clear the air. Be more forgiving and let go of past hurts, resentments. You can add new depth and dimension to key relationships. Finish old business rather than starting new activities. Through prayer and meditation you can gain deep penetrating insights and find new meanings in life.

Celebrating Purim

The Irish have St. Patrick, Jews look to Esther and Mordecai

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Thousands will deck their homes with shamrocks and wave Irish flags in honor of St. Patrick's Day this weekend. But local Jews have tl own holiday revels to plan. Pu — a joyous colorful Jewish holiday begins March 20. At Hingha Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, Purim Carnival set for Sunday will kick off the festive occasion.

"The Junior Judaica For Youth" hardly does the holiday justice when it describes Purim a "one of the minor festivals in th Jewish calendar."

"It's a big feature at our congregation," said Susan Neim Ference, the congregation's asso ate director of education."It c brates a victor over tyranny. It's c sidered a very joyous holiday, es cially for children."

Ference added the festive natur of the holiday first began in 15th century Italy among the Jewish p ulation that country.

A day of reflection and remembrance of the deliverance of the Je from Persia in the fifth century, story of Purim can be found in Book of Esther in the Bible.

The Junior Judaica states the st of Purim begins with a man nam Haman, minister of the Pers King, planning and initiating a p to destroy the Jewish populati within the Persian Empire.

Haman's hatred was based or his contempt of a Jew named Mordecai, the stepfather of Queen Esther, the King of Persia's Jewish wife.

According to Michael Strassfield's book "The Jewish Holidays" the Persian King v apparently unaware that his bi was Jewish.

In short, Esther and Moredc become aware of Hamen's evil scheme and joined together to counteract his plan to destroy the Jews.

"Esther entrances the king, wines and dines him, and then reveals she is Jewish and pleads for her people. Haman is hanged and the Jews are allowed to turn the tables on their enemies. Mordecai and Esther live happily ever after, after instituting Purim as an annual holiday," Strassfield writes.

Rabbi Stephen Karol, who has been with Congregation Sha'aray Shalom for the past 19 years, said his congregation celebrates the holiday in two major ways.

First, the congregation will host the Purim Carnival on March 19, from 10:30 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. . The carnival features Purim games, readings from The Book of Esther, a costume parade, and foods like hamentashen — a tasty triangular shaped cookie filled with fruit or poppy seeds.

"(The hamentashen's) shape reminds us of Haman's legendary three-cornered hat," Ference said.

Karol said the second major part of celebrating Purim is reading the Megillah, a parchment scroll with readings from the Book of Esther.

"Today, we celebrate the holiday with humor," Ference said, noting another part of the Purim celebration entails the use of "gregers," traditional noisemakers which are used to "drown out" the name of Haman every time it is mentioned in the readings of the Book of Esther.

"There's an old saying about Purim, and that is that you should drink so much on the holi t you can't even recognize Haman. And the gregers are used to blot out the sound of his name," Ference said.

Although Ference said the iday is not among the najor" Jewish holidays like om Kippur and Rosh Hashanah, she said "it's very tive, joyful, and most importtly, family oriented. It repreits the defeat of an oppressor, it is very important in that ect."

Children get into the act, aid Karol by acting in a skit own as "Purim Shpil."

Ference said the story of im is typically recreated in erent fashions.

his year, Congregation aray Shalom's Purim Shpil is "A Motown Purim," where the songs in the skit will reflect the attributes of the Motown musical genre, Ference said.

Karol said in the past, Purim Shpils have incorporated the themes of "The Wizard of Oz" and even themes from "Oklahoma."

While children are very much a part of the festival fun, Karol said adults are encouraged to join in the celebration.

Purim has gotten the reputa of being a children's holiay. We want to encourage adults to come to the celem. The more, the merrier!"

said anyone of any faith is e to come and join the Purim celebration.

The Purim celebration begins on March 19, at 10:30 a.m. at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, Main Street, Hingham. There will be readings from the Book of Esther at the synagogue on March 20 at 8 p.m. . For more information call Ference at (781) 749-8103.

"It's very festive, joyful, and most importantly, family oriented. It represents the defeat of an oppressor, so it is very important in that aspect."

Married buyers boost home sales to new heights

By Paula Woodhull

Who's buying homes in America? That's the question posed by the Chicago Title Corporation in a recent national survey.

The answer is, married couples, according to the results released in the company's 24th annual analysis of major market home sales in 1999.

"Rising interest rates certainly affected buyer profiles in 1999, but continued consumer confidence and the increase in married and repeat buyers helped the home-buying market achieve another record year," said John Pfister of Chicago Title.

Some 20 major market areas were surveyed including Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, New York City, Detroit, Orlando, and Phoenix, among others.

The survey showed that consumers and homebuyers remained confident in the strong domestic economy throughout 1999.

Home sales last year rose 6 percent over 1998, due largely to the healthy economy and continued low unemployment, the survey shows.

But a slight rise in mortgage interest rates in 1999 dampened the enthusiasm of purchasing a new home for single and first-time homebuyers.

During the last four years, historically low interest rates have drawn more and more single and minority homebuyers into the active real estate market.

The Chicago Title Corporation found that in 1997, the market share for single and minority homebuyers increased dramatically, due to lower interest rates which enabled more people to qualify for mortgages.

The number of single people buying homes in 1998 decreased somewhat, mostly because the market had been swamped with this category of homebuyer the previous year, according to past surveys of home buying trends. However, in 1998 the number of first-time homebuyers held constant.

In 1999 the number of single

During the last four years, historically low interest rates have drawn more and more single and minority homebuyers into the active real estate market.

The Chicago Title Corporation found that in 1997, the market share for single and minority and first-time homebuyers dropped, showing the effects of the hike in interest rates during that year.

Interestingly, the timing of the interest rate increases helped married buyers, according to Chicago Title. Interest rates were at their lowest during the spring of 1999, when most married couples buy a new home.

Single people, on the other hand, tend to get into the housing market at any time of the year but when interest rates begin to rise, singles usually bow out of the market.

During 1999, the number of married homebuyers climbed 7.3 percent over 1998. However, the number of unmarried people who are first-time buyers rose only by 3 percent in 1999.

Looking at all home purchases in 1999, married buyers comprised 67 percent of that category, up slightly from the previous year. The number of single, never-married homebuyers dipped a little from 18 to 17 percent in 1999.

Homeless advocate Dennis Carman honored

Dennis Carman, executive director of the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless, recently was recognized with the Citizen of the Year award by the Jack Conway and Company real estate firm.

Chairman Jack Conway said the award, presented at the firm's annual convention at the Sea Crest Resort in Falmouth, honors the hard work and dedication of Carman and the staff of the Coalition. BCH operates two shelters for the homeless, MainSpring House in Brockton and Conway House in Middleboro.

"When I called to ask Dennis to accept this award, he initially declined it, saying he didn't think he deserved it alone," Conway said. "So we followed his suggestion and decided to honor him on behalf of everyone who works so hard at the Brockton Coalition every day."

Carman, who lives in Halifax with his wife, Theresa, and their four children, has led the BCH since 1994. Previously, he was executive director of the Anchor House residential treatment center in Plymouth, and has worked as a counselor and administrator at several area social-service agencies.

"The Coalition's work is very similar to yours," Carman told the 300 real estate agents at the convention. "We are trying to find people good and decent housing. And with the help of people like you, we are making progress toward that goal every day."

Carman holds a master's degree in social work and public administration from Ohio State University, and is a graduate of Stonehill College in North Easton. He is current chairman of the United Way Agency Executives and serves on the board of directors of the Old Colony YMCA and the Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance.

Past 'Conway Country' citizens of the year have included Brockton Mayor John T. Yunits, Quincy Mayor James A. Sheets; The Rev. Bartley MacPhaidin, president of Stonehill College; Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino; Hon. Edward P. Kirby; former Plymouth County Development Council Executive Director Brooks Kelly and former Banker & Tradesman Editor William Mallard.

Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

For more information about the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless — or to make a financial contribution, volunteer your time or donate food or clothing — call Carman or Director of Volunteers and Donations Julie Vaitkus at (508) 587-5441 or write BCH, 54 North Main St., Brockton, MA 02401.

Free seminar to give first-time homebuyers money-saving tools

A seminar planned for later this month will help first-time homebuyers save money on their mortgage. Representatives of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and Jack Conway & Co. will discuss the benefits of Federal Housing Administration (FHA) loans, which allow first-time buyers to purchase a home with a down payment of 3 percent. FHA loans also allow the entire down payment to be a gift.

Participants in the March 20 seminar will be eligible to receive a free financial analysis and a copy of their credit report, said Carol Bulman, president of Conway Financial Services. Potential buyers who attend the seminar and complete the credit consultation will receive a certificate that entitles them to a half-point reduction in the up-front mortgage-insurance premium on FHA loans — a savings of $750 on a loan of $150,000.

"It's a fantastic opportunity for people to learn about their financing options and see which loan programs are available to them," Bulman said. "Anyone thinking about buying a home in the Quincy area and surrounding communities is encouraged to come and have their questions answered."

The homebuyer education seminar will be held from 7 to 9 p.m., Monday, March 20, at the Sons of Italy Hall, 120 Quarry St., Quincy. The free event, sponsored by Jack Conway & Co. in partnership with HUD, is the only one of its kind in the area.

In addition to the financing discussion and an outline of the home-buying process, information on HUD-owned properties and other homes currently for sale will be provided.

Other seminars are scheduled to be held during the next three months in Brockton, Dorchester and the Fall River/New Bedford area, Bulman said.

Reservations are not required, but are preferred since space is limited. Call (888) 831-1181 to reserve your seat.

Conway offers licensing course

The Conway Country School of Real Estate will offer an intensive, two-day continuing-education program for real estate licensees on Tuesday, March 28 and Wednesday, March 29 at the Ramada Inn in Rockland.

The two-day event is open to all of the state's 125,000 licensed real estate agents – whether active or inactive – and will satisfy the state0s requirement of 12 hours of continuing-education credit for license renewal.

"We are very pleased to be offering these courses for our own agents and for our colleagues," Chairman Jack Conway said in announcing the program. "A solid education is a very important part of providing good service to our customers, and we are hopeful that many agents will take advantage of this unique opportunity."

The classes, which run from 9 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. on Tuesday and 9:30 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. on Wednesday, will cover fair-housing policies, agency representation and environmental law, among other subjects.

Participants may choose any or all of the six courses being offered to fulfill their license-renewal requirements, according to Education Director Norman LaRocque, and should make reservations in advance.

For more information and a registration form, call the school at (781) 826-0088. The cost is $10 per credit hour.

IN BRIEF

Norwell real estate broker wins 'Chairman's Club' designation

Cheryl Gates Tesler, a Hingham resident and 16-year veteran of the real estate business, won the prestigious Chairman's Club award in real estate sales at DeWolfe New England.

Tesler, who has also won the Chairman's Club designation for four previous years, is affiliated with the DeWolfe New England office in Norwell. She has received numerous awards within the real estate industry, including the designation of "Top Producer" for 1996 and 1997 of her Norwell office. As a winner of this year's Chairman's Club, Tesler will be among 150 realtors, representing the top 5 percent of sales in the industry, who will go on a trip to Palm Beach, Fla. this fall.

A lifelong South Shore resident, Tesler was born and raised in Scituate, where the Gates name was well known in several areas. Her family was active in business for many years, with the Gates Family clothing store; the Gates Intermediate School is named for her father, Lester J. Gates.

She lived in Norwell prior to moving to Hingham, where she lives with her husband, Michael. They have two children. Prior to joining the real estate field, she was the owner of a rental business, as well as a kindergarten teacher. She holds a bachelor's degree from Boston University.

Her sales for 1999 reached $9.5 million; this sales volume puts her in the category of one of the top listing and selling brokers on the South Shore, and among the top three in Scituate.

Tesler is a member of the National Association of Realtors; Bay State Multiple Listing Service; and is a Certified Relocation Specialist.

"I am thrilled to have the chance to work with so many people who are relocating," she said. "I believe in building relationships that do not end the day papers are passed," she continued. "I believe that being a real estate agent means being there for people and helping them with every step of the transaction. Sometimes this extends far beyond the normal realm of a property transaction, and may include recommending a hair stylist, tailor, places to shop and much more," she said.

Cheryl Tesler can be reached at 781-659-7955, or via e-mail at CGTforHome@aol.com.

Houghton, Golden named Managers of the Year

Lynne Houghton and Karen Golden recently were recognized as Managers of the Year for 1999 by the Jack Conway and Company real estate firm. Houghton manages the Quincy office; Golden leads the Weymouth sales team.

The awards were presented by president Richard F. Cahill during the 13th annual "Conway Country" convention. The event, which included a trade show, workshops and continuing-education courses for agents, was held Feb. 4 at the Sea Crest Resort in Falmouth.

Cahill said the Manager of the Year award recognizes many elements of a manager's job, including the operation of the office, sales performance, team spirit and involvement in the community.

"Both of these managers injected enthusiasm, leadership and a winning attitude in their agents," Cahill said. "As a result both of these offices have seen a tremendous increase in their profitability and market share during the last year.

Salamone completes real estate course

Robert Salamone, director of education and public relations, Crescent Realty Group, Hanover, has successfully completed Course 301 of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors Realtor Institute Program held recently in Burlington.

The comprehensive two-day course is designed for Realtors who wish to learn more about current issues and trends. The Graduate Realtor Institute (GRI) Course 301 is one of six, 15 hour-courses, which comprise the 90-hour GRI program. Upon completion of the six courses, participants earn the nationally-recognized Graduate Realtor Institute (GRI) designation.

"Crescent Realty is committed to having the most highly educated sales force in the industry," said Salamone. "As the director of education it's up to me to set the standard."

Crescent Realty Group is a full-service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

New Releases

DROWNING MONA (PG-13) A depressing Hudson Valley town and its degenerate denizens include Mona (Bette Midler), a dreadful mom and wife who dies early on, of drowning, and many Yugos - the town was used to test the awful little autos - plus many morons and hotheads. Danny DeVito is sane as the sheriff, and Jamie Lee Curtis does fine as a waitress. A lot of sleeping around; some killing. (D.B.) C+

MY DOG SKIP (PG) Heartwarming (and sometimes heartrending) story of writer Willie Morris' 1940s youth, starring Frankie Munz ("Malcolm in the Middle") and a Jack Russell terrier, with Diane Lane and Kevin Bacon as the boy's parents. Segregation is shown but not dwelled on. The emphasis is on the boy's and dog's reciprocal affection. (D.B.) B+

THE NEXT BEST THING (PG-13) A schmaltzy tale of a gay guy (Rupert Everett) who fathers a child with his best friend (Madonna) but then is threatened with the loss of his son when the boy's mother falls in love and plans to marry and move away. Moments of tenderness followed by a lugubrious third act concluding with a risible resolution. (D.B.) C

THE NINTH GATE (R) Mumbo-jumbo about a book allegedly written by the devil, a rare book hunter (Johnny Depp) sent on a mission to ascertain authenticity, a wealthy nutcase book collector (Frank Langella) and a beautiful woman (Emmanuelle Seigner) who follows the Depp character around. It has moments that intrigue, then it crashes. (D.B.) C-

NOT ONE LESS (G) From China, the story of a teenage substitute teacher in a rural village who ventures to the city to retrieve an absent pupil. Most of the performers are amateurs playing themselves, and while the depiction of unsophisticated village China is unpretty, the emotional level eventually reached is high. Directed by Zhang Yimou. (D.B.) B-

Ongoing

AGNES BROWNE (PG-13) An Irish widow and mother (Anjelica Huston) makes a life for herself and her children in Ireland, living at the fringes of poverty, but she makes do somehow. An immigrant who works nearby gets a yen for her, which she can barely reciprocate, and her best friend suffers a crisis. A bit grimmer than needs be, but flashes of passion are to be found here, too. (D.B.) B

ALL ABOUT MY MOTHER (Unrated) Pedro Almodovar's latest deals with tough women confronting tough circumstances, including the loss of one character's teenage son and the drug addiction of another's lover. It centers on Manuela (Cecilia Roth), who ventures from Madrid to Barcelona to find her dead son's father. "All About Eve" and "A Streetcar Named Desire" play a part. (D.B.) B+

THE BEACH (R) Paradise found, and lost, as Leonardo DiCaprio ventures into Thailand, learns about a hidden island with its glorious beach, and goes there. He finds a community, self-sufficient, almost, and he finds sex, or love, or something. This has its cinematic virtues, but its story is trite and the hackneyed quality undermines it. (D.B.) C

BEAUTIFUL PEOPLE (R) Refugees from Yugoslavia, living in London, demonstrate many of the attributes of mankind: heroism, cowardice, anger, joy. The stories intertwine in some ways, are separate in others, and the degree of interest they will inspire in audiences varies widely. A bit shaky is the bridging of the gaps between the tales, but now and again, something dramatic bursts forth. (D.B.) B-

BOILER ROOM (R) A fast-paced, gritty look at the world of questionable stock trading companies, this one regularly bilking its unwary phone clients. Giovanni Ribisi craves attention from his jerk of a father (Ron Rifkin) and tries to prove himself by being a success in the company. Great performances, weird lighting, unpleasant situations. (E.S.) B

THE CUP (G) Tibetan monastery students in exile in India are obsessed by the World Cup soccer final game and energize themselves to get a TV set to be able to watch it. The senior monk complies. A pleasant small film about trying not to let the desires of the world interfere too much with monkish abnegation. Based on true events. (D.B.) B-

THE END OF THE AFFAIR (R) The beautifully acted story of a writer (Ralph Fiennes) and his affair with the wife (Julianne Moore) of a friend (Stephen Rea) during World War II in London. Everyone seems exceptionally unhappy here, with moroseness the prevailing mood, although it contains one bit of humor in the guise of a befuddled detective. (D.B.) B

HANGING UP (PG-13) Insufferably noisy tale of a senile, wretched father (Walter Matthau), the daughter (Meg Ryan) who takes care of him, and her sisters (Diane Keaton and Lisa Kudrow), who don't. Much shrieking and continual telephone conversations till you'll want to scream back at the screen. Emotionally empty. (D.B.) D+

HOLY SMOKE (R) A young woman (Kate Winslet) goes to India and becomes a cult member. Her Australian family hires an American deprogrammer (Harvey Keitel) to rescue her. What ensues is a sometimes hilarious venture into the absurd, with the young woman turning the tables on the know-it-all American. It grows very wild by the end. (D.B.) B

MAGNOLIA (R) A pastiche picture, with sometimes interlocking plot lines, about a short time span in urban America. Tom Cruise is outstanding as a fitness and sexually chauvinistic huckster, and the rest of the cast, too numerous to mention here, is sensational in a story that goes from the mundane to biblical-sized plague. Terrifically powerful. (D.B.) B+

PITCH BLACK (R) A spaceship crashes on a desolate planet, apparently one always sun-lit. One by one the evil creatures (nicely imagined through computers) pick off the survivors, one of whom is a criminal who turns out to have some redeeming social value. The movie has very little social redeeming value and is unimaginative and badly acted. (D.B.) D

REAR WINDOW (PG) The terrific 1954 Hitchcock film, restored in a restored print, features our hero (James Stewart) temporarily wheelchair bound, his purse (Thelma Ritter) and his girlfriend (Grace Kelly) observing strange goings-on across the courtyard. Raymond Burr is the villain. Nothing particularly indecorous, but it's sexy just the same. (D.B.) A-

REINDEER GAMES (R) Ben Affleck stars as an ex-con trying to go straight and narrow but gets caught up with a beautiful woman (Charlize Theron) and her lover's brother (Gary Sinise). The purpose of the ferocity is to make our hero help rob a casino. Ultra-violent and ultimately defying the laws of believability, but perky nonetheless. (D.B.) B

SCREAM 3 (R) The trequel centering on the murders that occur on and around the making of "Stab 3: Return to Woodsboro," based on the events of the first two "Screams." Nary a scary moment within it. The franchise has run its course, and this installment makes no more sense than its predecessors and is much less amusing, save for a few inside jokes. (D.B.) C+

SNOW DAY (PG) Chevy Chase plays a TV weatherman at a dilapidated station, who's good, but nobody knows it. His teenage son is in lust with a dreamboat girl who couldn't care less, and his precocious daughter is hoping desperately for a school snow day. When Nature complies, the town's children have a ball. More than that can be said for the audience. (D.B.) C+

STUART LITTLE (PG) A nice family (Geena Davis and Hugh Laurie) adopts a mouse as kid brother to their cute little son (Jonathan Lipnicki). The family cat wants nothing to do with Stuart, and his cat friends figure out how to get rid of the rodent. Digital special effects wizardry does the trick, but the story is so banal. (D.B.) C

THE TIGGER MOVIE (G) A Disney diversion from Pooh's attempt to find more honey for himself, and of his friends' efforts to help him understand that they - Pooh, Piglet, Eeyore - are his real family. A nice moral lesson for very small children, who'll appreciate this animated feature, which is only 76 minutes long. (D.B.) B-

TOPSY-TURVY (PG-13) How Gilbert and Sullivan worked their way out of their doldrums and created "The Mikado," in a riotous, rambunctious merry pudding of a picture starring Allen Corduner and Jim Broadbent as the two musical geniuses who disliked each other but created sublimely funny musicals. (D.B.) B+

WHAT PLANET ARE YOU FROM? (R) Garry Shandling is a visitor from another solar system on a mission to impregnate a woman from Earth. When he meets up with lonely Annette Bening, the plan seems to be working. Very funny stuff - from broad to subtle comedy - with a well-placed sense of observation running through it, and unfortunately, a too-fast ending. (E.S.) B+

THE WHOLE NINE YARDS (R) When a notorious hit-man (Bruce Willis) moves in next door, mild-mannered dentist Matthew Perry freaks. Featuring Natasha Henstridge, Amanda Peet, Kevin Pollak, Arquette and Michael Clarke Duncan, this is hysterical in its early parts, less so later on. The body count isn't too high, but neither, ultimately, are the laughs. (D.B.) B-

WONDER BOYS (R) A professor with writer's block (Michael Douglas) has an awful couple of days, as his publisher (Robert Downey, Jr.) comes to town, his brightest student (Tobey Maguire) commits crimes, his lover (Katie Holmes) comes on to him, his lover (Frances McDormand) tells him a crucial secret, and the cops are on his tail. Wild and woolly. B

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Madonna and Malcolm Stumpf share a nice mother-son relationship.

The Next Best Thing (C)

TV's "Will and Grace" has made a success out of that old standard arrangement of the homosexual world: the gay guy and his straight best friend who is a girl. Women often say that they feel comfortable around gay men because there's no sexual tension between them and they can express their feelings - always a big deal with females - to someone who won't take advantage of those feelings in a sexual way. It makes for many an anecdote at certain types of cocktail parties. How does it work in the movies? It worked well in "My Best Friend's Wedding"; it works less well here in "The Next Best Thing," which takes the situation beyond buddyhood and into parenthood, and there's the trap.

Handsome, hunky Robert (Rupert Everett, looking vaguely dyspeptic throughout) works as a gardener; lovely, bouncy Abbie (Madonna) works as a yoga instructor. They are mad about each other, and as Abbie's latest boyfriend departs - he's not ready to "commit" yet, he informs her - there's always Robert's broad shoulders to cry on, and Robert is also not above camping it up in a scene designed to humiliate the departing lover and to retrieve Abbie's house keys. So we see that when pressed, Robert can fulfill the stereotype.

One thing leads to another one night while the two are frolicking in the fancy-schmancy house of two flamboyant fellows whose gardens Robert is tending, and before you know it, she's pregnant, he's the dad and he says he'll commit to being a real dad. The child (Malcolm Stumpf) is good cinema kid material and we fall for him right away. But soon Abbie falls for a businessman (even hunkier Benjamin Bratt, formerly on "Law and Order" as Detective Rey Curtis) who is in L.A. for some project, love blossoms and the prospect looms that Abbie and the new guy will marry and move to New York. What happens to the child?

Here the movie goes off the track and what had been an acceptably light-weight romp with the gay guy-straight gal with kid shtick turns serious. A custody battle ensues. There's a surprising development that complicates matters and there is one of those no-nonsense judges (a black woman; nearly all movie and TV judges are black women) who has to play Solomon and does her best at it. But how to rescue the movie from the bind it has put itself into? It would help if we could believe for more than a millisecond that Madonna is the mother of this child, or for more than two minutes that Rupert Everett's Robert actually cares about her, or that Benjamin Bratt's character is quite as alluring as he's made out to be. The movie is Hollywood glitz in actuality while trying to be something sincere, a heartfelt venture that, to up the ante on sincerity, will cynically throw in Neil Patrick Harris as a guy who's lost his lover to AIDS and has to contend with the dead lover's uncomprehending, cruelly insensitive family. It's all to much, and the ending will make you guffaw. Next ... ?

What Planet Are You From? (B)

If men are from Mars and women are from Venus, what planet is Garry Shandling from? In this latest directorial effort from Mike Nichols, who knows his way around earthly creatures, Shandling, the erstwhile "Larry Sanders," plays a guy from a planet made up entirely of guys. Moreover, this planet has done away with sex entirely such that the guys have no sex organs - ouch - and no emotions. Their leader (Ben Kingsley, playing it straight) tells his co-planetary fellows that their planet is bent on galactic conquest and the first step is to send somebody to Earth to impregnate a thing called a female and bring forth a child.

Just exactly what this child is to do, or whether he's to be a kind of Rosemary's baby, isn't made clear. Nothing so much as a coherent plot is hatched on this planet of sexless men, just a daring adventure. For the mission, the men are instructed in the ways of the female species: Congratulate her on her shoes, her clothes, tell her that she looks good, and as she babbles on, as babble on she is wont to do, learn to say "uh huh" after each of her sentences, thereby convincing her that you are paying attention. (This, by the way, is good advice for earthlings, too. Uh huh.)

Shandling is the one sent to do the trick, and his first efforts are pathetic, in that he takes his training all too seriously and tosses off these out of context compliments even as, having scored with a lady, he then immediately tries to get her into bed. He phrases it more boldly, more, shall we say, descriptively. Leave it at that. He goes to work in a bank, is befriended by a sleazeball (Greg Kinnear) who takes him to both a nudie bar and to an AA meeting - "a great place to meet chicks" - where, in fact, he spies one lady, Susan (Annette Bening), a recovering alcoholic, whom he later meets in the bank and begins a romance. One thing leads to another. Meanwhile, an airline inspector (John Goodman) is trying to figure out what happened one day when something bizarre occurred on a flight. (It was our hero arriving, actually.)

That's the story, told with off-hand ease and a willingness to let the jokes pour forth untroubled by inappropriateness. The Shandling character, who goes by the name Harold Anderson, is presented plausibly as a fellow whose native instincts are purely for opportunism and who therefore really doesn't comprehend the meaning of the strange expression "love," but who learns, gradually, that maybe emotions aren't the worst thing in the world. Bening's Susan is captivatingly open to being wounded by indifference, and we feel for her, a triumph on a low key for the actress. Kinnear's scummy co-worker sports one of those trendy mustache cum goatee jobbies that gives him a look both sinister and doofusy, and Goodman plods ahead, searching ever more valiantly for the solution of the mystery on that flight. The movie is minor but fitfully amusing and done consistently with panache.

Written by Garry Shandling, Michael Leeson, Ed Solomon and Peter Tolan; directed by Mike Nichols. Rated R.

Advice for elderly travelers

By George Hobica
Special to the Mariner

Q. My husband and I are in our 70s, and want to visit a daughter in England in early August for 10 days to two weeks. We are inexperienced travelers and this would probably be a one-time trip.

Can you give us some idea of how we could travel business class at a reasonable cost? We assume that tickets would have to be bought far in advance. Also, is there a way to insure our ticket purchase so, in case we couldn't take the trip, we could receive a refund?

A. I can understand why you'd want the comfort of business class. Traveling overnight in a cramped economy-class cabin can be torture for someone in their 40s or 50s, but must be horrendous if you're 70 or more.

One way to ease the pain is to take a daylight flight to England (one that leaves New York at around 9 a.m., and arrive at 8 or 9 at night). It's much more comfortable since you won't fall asleep in a cramped position.

Business class is very expensive - $5,000-$7,000 or more round-trip isn't unusual, depending on where you're traveling from.

Business-class tickets don't need to be bought far in advance (if there's room, you can buy them on the day of travel).

One of the best ways for two people to travel reasonably is to acquire an American Express Platinum charge card since one of the perks is two-for-one travel in business and first class on many airlines. As for insurance, if you buy a ticket with British Airways and you're 60 and over, you will get a full refund if you cancel, even at the last minute.

Q. I am 19 and would like to rent a car for a couple of weeks in Europe this summer. But I'm finding the rental agencies I've contacted won't rent to people under 23 or 25.

Can you suggest a company that does rent to younger drivers?

A. The best solution for you is to rent with Renault's Eurodrive short-term lease program. Short-term leases are often easier to arrange and are more flexible than rentals, and the minimum age for leasing is 18 (there's no upper age limit either; some rentals in Europe require the driver to be under age 70).

In addition, leasing comes with fewer geographic restrictions since there are 33 Renault pickup and drop-off locations in nine countries, which makes it easy to pick up in one country and drop off in a different one.

It also can be cheaper than a traditional rental. A 17-day lease for a subcompact starts at $499, including complete insurance and unlimited mileage. The savings really add up the longer you keep the car.

For more information, call (800) 221-1052, or visit www.renaultusa.com/.

Q. My husband and I recently bought round-trip tickets on US Airways to West Palm Beach. While there, we received a call that my father had died suddenly. I called US Airways and they informed me that they had no seats available for our flight back home because of school vacation week, so I had to buy a one-way ticket on another airline.

At least I got the bereavement rate, but even that cost us more than the original round-trip fare.

My question is this: How do I go about getting a refund for the unused return tickets?

A. US Airways responds: "Although the tickets were based on a nonrefundable fare, US Airways makes provisions for circumstances such as this. We ask that customers submit documentation of the date of death, relationship, funeral home and the attending physician or hospital, together with the actual tickets to our Passenger Refunds Department. A refund, minus the service charge, will be credited to the original form of payment.

"We usually advise our customers to contact reservations to discuss the reissue of partially used tickets."

Depending on the price of the tickets, you might not get very much back once the $75 service fee is deducted. You could also apply the remaining value of the tickets toward a flight on the same route within one year of original purchase date.

George Hobica

Q. My brother and I are in our 30s, and might decide to go on vacation together this year. The problem is we have different tastes except for the fact that we both would like to go somewhere that has warm weather, great beaches and some sightseeing.

Can you recommend anything? We don't want a really expensive place, but not a cheap place either, since you get what you pay for. Any ideas?

A. Hawaii! I've been several times, but can't wait to go back. The weather is perfect, the beaches varied and superb, and there's a large variety of climates and soft adventure activities like horseback riding, parasailing and water sports to keep two guys your age more than busy.

It's not as cheap as Mexico, but it's less expensive than some Caribbean islands like St. Barts, which has nice beaches but little in the way of sightseeing.

Dan Adams with Marty, his macaw, that caused a ruckus on the town common last week.

Sirens send exotic bird flying

Stranded macaw causes (un)common commotion

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Marty, a ten-month-old blue and gold macaw, defied the laws of physics last week when he tested his wings for the first time.

"Physically he shouldn't be able to fly," said his owner, Dan Adams, shaking his head while explaining that the bird's wings were clipped. "It was sheer determination."

It all started around lunchtime on Thursday when Adams, who lives in an apartment above the community center, took a break from work to come home and take Marty out for their usual walk to the mailbox.

But then the unexpected happened. A fire engine and ambulance came around the corner with sirens blaring — startling Marty — who took off skyward.

"He didn't know what to do, he'd never flown before."
— Dan Adams, bird owner

"I thought he was going to land in the street and might get hit," said Adams. "But then the wind caught him and up he went gliding between the electrical wires. Then he looped and landed in a tree.

"He didn't know what to do, he'd never flown before."

Marty landed about 35 feet up in the big ash tree at the edge of the duck pond. Adams tried to coax him down but to no avail.

Soon Marty's plight drew a crowd and someone flagged down the fire department on its way back from the emergency call.

"We decided we'd try to help the young fellow out," Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said. "But our apparatus was attracting speculation and becoming part of the problem."

Scituate calls for Greenbush audit

Will hold meeting tonight

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

An investigation into the billions of dollars spent on the Big Dig inspired local selectmen to consider examining where MBTA funds spent on restoration of the Greenbush line are going.

In a letter to the boards of selectmen in Hingham and Cohasset, Scituate selectmen requested a meeting, tonight, to discuss writing a joint letter to the state auditor's office requesting an independent study on the rising cost of the Greenbush project.

"The project's been going on for ten years," said Scituate selectman Joseph Norton. The aim of the request is to find out how much has been spent so far and on what, he said, including what the MBTA has paid to Sverdrup, the engineering company contracted by the MBTA for the project.

"I think all you have to do is look at the Big Dig when people are allowed to go and build any type of a project," he said referring to Turnpike Authority Chairman James J. Kerasiotes. Over the past two decades, the cost of the project has risen from $57 million to $150 million to $400 million today, said Norton who has seen the plan through the 17 years he has served as selectman.

"I certainly don't think it would uncover anything. I think the T would welcome it," said Norton.

Hingham selectman Katharine Reardon said she will attend tonight's meeting.

"I will be interested to hear more about what that will entail," she said of the request.

"The overall statement that this project is incredibly overblown, as far as price, is certainly a statement we all should be making," Reardon said. "I think whether this means getting information that is fruitful — only time will tell."

Cohasset selectmen chairman Merle Brown said he's in favor of anything that will get the MBTA to pay attention to the towns' concerns but is pessimistic when it comes to what he thinks will come of it.

"Probably much of nothing," he said. "Knowing the T they'll slough it off."

The tri-town meeting will take place tonight at the Scituate Public Library on Branch Street at 7:30 p.m.

Not being neighborly

Scituate remarks miff selectmen

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset selectmen had planned to attend tonight's train meeting in Scituate with a spirit of cooperation.

But that changed after they read published reports last week that Scituate selectmen want the train layover station moved to Cohasset.

"They're saying, 'We don't want a layover station, so stick it in Cohasset,'" Selectman Ronnie McMorris said. "I have a problem meeting with them."

Annual town meeting may be a turning point

Issues of great importance to Cohasset's future

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Those residents planning on attending Saturday's annual town meeting had better plan on clearing next Monday night on their calendars as well.

"It's absolutely going to go to Monday night, and it may go to Tuesday night," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "There are a lot of important articles this year."

Foremost among the 41 articles in terms of potential impact upon the future of the town is the proposed $41.8 million renovation of Deer Hill Middle School and Cohasset Middle-High School.

The proposed project includes renovations and additions at both schools, upgrading infrastructure to allow the buildings to last for another 50 years, and would ensure the schools meet the standards of the Americans with Disabilities Act, with which they are currently not in compliance.

A reconfiguration of grade levels has been voted by the school committee in conjunction with an approved renovation project. The sixth grade is to move from Deer Hill to an expanded middle school, while the third grade is to move from Osgood to Deer Hill.

The reconfiguration would leave three grades at Osgood (K-2), Deer Hill (3-5), and Cohasset Middle School (6-8). Cohasset High School is to retain its current 9-12 grade configuration.

The grades would not switch schools until the 2004-2005 school

Tax bill offers rebates to seniors

Must file income tax return to qualify

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Living in Cohasset isn't inexpensive for anyone.

But senior citizens on fixed incomes have a particularly tough time living in a town where the average annual tax bill exceeds $5,500.

Thanks to the state Legislature, help is on the way beginning in fiscal year 2002. The Legislature recently approved the Circuit Breaker Bill, which offers tax rebates between $375 and $750 to senior citizens who meet certain income requirements. But there is a catch: to take advantage of the rebate, senior citizens will have to file an income tax return to prove their eligibility. Many senior citizens on fixed incomes are not required to file income tax returns.

"The idea is to give seniors who are on fixed incomes a means to stay in their homes," said Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, one of the lead supporters of the legislation. "This may provide enough relief for seniors to stay in their homes rather than move to less expensive houses or apartments."

The legislation states that eligible applicants will receive a rebate if their combined real estate, tax, and water and sewer bills exceed 10 percent of their annual income.

Senate President Thomas Birmingham, D-Chelsea, introduced the legislation to assist seniors struggling to make ends meet while paying property taxes, utility costs and sewer and water fees. Hedlund said some seniors have had to move out of homes they had lived in for decades because of rising property tax assessments and increases in utility costs.

According to the Department of Revenue's (DOR) City & Town publication, senior citizens 65 and older can take advantage of the program if they meet the following criteria:

- Senior citizens must occupy their homes as principal residences.
- They must have an income less than an amount determined in advance by DOR. Currently, the annual income ceiling for applicants

Advice for elderly travelers

COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. My husband and I are in our 70s, and want to visit a daughter in England in early August for 10 days to two weeks. We are inexperienced travelers and this would probably be a one-time trip.

Business class is very expensive - $5,000-$7,000 or more round-trip isn't unusual, depending on where you're traveling from.

Business-class tickets don't need to be bought far in advance (if there's room, you can buy them on the day of travel).

At least I got the bereavement rate, but even that cost us more than the original round-trip fare.

My question is this: How do I go about getting a refund for the unused return tickets?

A. US Airways responds: "Although the tickets were based on a nonrefundable fare, US Airways makes provisions for circumstances such as this. We ask that customers submit documentation of the date of death, relationship, funeral home and the attending physician or hospital, together with the actual tickets to our Passenger Refunds Department. A refund, minus the service charge, will be credited to the original form of payment.

"We usually advise our customers to contact reservations to discuss the reissue of partially used tickets."

Depending on the price of the tickets, you might not get very much back once the $75 service fee is deducted. You could also apply the remaining value of the tickets toward a flight on the same route within one year of original purchase date.

Dan Adams with Marty, his macaw, that caused a ruckus on the town common last week.

Sirens send exotic bird flying

Stranded macaw causes (un)common commotion

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Marty, a ten-month-old blue and gold macaw, defied the laws of physics last week when he tested his wings for the first time.

"Physically he shouldn't be able to fly," said his owner, Dan Adams, shaking his head while explaining that the bird's wings were clipped. "It was sheer determination."

It all started around lunchtime on Thursday when Adams, who lives in an apartment above the community center, took a break from work to come home and take Marty out for their usual walk to the mailbox.

But then the unexpected happened. A fire engine and ambulance came around the corner with sirens blaring — startling Marty — who took off skyward.

"He didn't know what to do, he'd never flown before."
— Dan Adams, bird owner

"I thought he was going to land in the street and might get hit," said Adams. "But then the wind caught him and up he went gliding between the electrical wires. Then he looped and landed in a tree.

"He didn't know what to do, he'd never flown before."

Marty landed about 35 feet up in the big ash tree at the edge of the duck pond. Adams tried to coax him down but to no avail.

Soon Marty's plight drew a crowd and someone flagged down the fire department on its way back from the emergency call.

"We decided we'd try to help the young fellow out," Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said. "But our apparatus was attracting speculation and becoming part of the problem."

Scituate calls for Greenbush audit

Will hold meeting tonight

By Michelle Forcier Anderson
STAFF WRITER

An investigation into the billions of dollars spent on the Big Dig inspired local selectmen to consider examining where MBTA funds spent on restoration of the Greenbush line are going.

In a letter to the boards of selectmen in Hingham and Cohasset, Scituate selectmen requested a meeting, tonight, to discuss writing a joint letter to the state auditor's office requesting an independent study on the rising cost of the Greenbush project.

"The project's been going on for ten years," said Scituate selectman Joseph Norton. The aim of the request is to find out how much has been spent so far and on what, he said, including what the MBTA has paid to Sverdrup, the engineering company contracted by the MBTA for the project.

"I think all you have to do is look at the Big Dig when people are allowed to go and build any type of a project," he said referring to Turnpike Authority Chairman James J. Kerasiotes. Over the past two decades, the cost of the project has risen from $57 million to $150 million to $400 million today, said Norton who has seen the plan through the 17 years he has served as selectman.

"I certainly don't think it would uncover anything. I think the T would welcome it," said Norton.

Hingham selectman Katharine Reardon said she will attend tonight's meeting.

"I will be interested to hear more about what that will entail," she said of the request.

"The overall statement that this project is incredibly overblown, as far as price, is certainly a statement we all should be making," Reardon said. "I think whether this means getting information that is fruitful — only time will tell."

Cohasset selectmen chairman Merle Brown said he's in favor of anything that will get the MBTA to pay attention to the towns' concerns but is pessimistic when it comes to what he thinks will come of it.

"Probably much of nothing," he said. "Knowing the T they'll slough it off."

The tri-town meeting will take place tonight at the Scituate Public Library on Branch Street at 7:30 p.m.

Not being neighborly

Scituate remarks miff selectmen

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset selectmen had planned to attend tonight's train meeting in Scituate with a spirit of cooperation.

But that changed after they read published reports last week that Scituate selectmen want the train layover station moved to Cohasset.

"They're saying, 'We don't want a layover station, so stick it in Cohasset,'" Selectman Ronnie McMorris said. "I have a problem meeting with them."

Annual town meeting may be a turning point

Issues of great importance to Cohasset's future

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Those residents planning on attending Saturday's annual town meeting had better plan on clearing next Monday night on their calendars as well.

"It's absolutely going to go to Monday night, and it may go to Tuesday night," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "There are a lot of important articles this year."

Foremost among the 41 articles in terms of potential impact upon the future of the town is the proposed $41.8 million renovation of Deer Hill Middle School and Cohasset Middle-High School.

The proposed project includes renovations and additions at both schools, upgrading infrastructure to allow the buildings to last for another 50 years, and would ensure the schools meet the standards of the Americans with Disabilities Act, with which they are currently not in compliance.

A reconfiguration of grade levels has been voted by the school committee in conjunction with an approved renovation project. The sixth grade is to move from Deer Hill to an expanded middle school, while the third grade is to move from Osgood to Deer Hill.

The reconfiguration would leave three grades at Osgood (K-2), Deer Hill (3-5), and Cohasset Middle School (6-8). Cohasset High School is to retain its current 9-12 grade configuration.

The grades would not switch schools until the 2004-2005 school

Tax bill offers rebates to seniors

Must file income tax return to qualify

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Living in Cohasset isn't inexpensive for anyone.

But senior citizens on fixed incomes have a particularly tough time living in a town where the average annual tax bill exceeds $5,500.

Thanks to the state Legislature, help is on the way beginning in fiscal year 2002. The Legislature recently approved the Circuit Breaker Bill, which offers tax rebates between $375 and $750 to senior citizens who meet certain income requirements. But there is a catch: to take advantage of the rebate, senior citizens will have to file an income tax return to prove their eligibility. Many senior citizens on fixed incomes are not required to file income tax returns.

"The idea is to give seniors who are on fixed incomes a means to stay in their homes," said Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, one of the lead supporters of the legislation. "This may provide enough relief for seniors to stay in their homes rather than move to less expensive houses or apartments."

The legislation states that eligible applicants will receive a rebate if their combined real estate, tax, and water and sewer bills exceed 10 percent of their annual income.

Senate President Thomas Birmingham, D-Chelsea, introduced the legislation to assist seniors struggling to make ends meet while paying property taxes, utility costs and sewer and water fees. Hedlund said some seniors have had to move out of homes they had lived in for decades because of rising property tax assessments and increases in utility costs.

According to the Department of Revenue's (DOR) City & Town publication, senior citizens 65 and older can take advantage of the program if they meet the following criteria:

• Senior citizens must occupy their homes as principal residences.

• They must have an income less than an amount determined in advance by DOR. Currently, the annual income ceiling for applicants

Cemetery computer

Selectmen approved a request from town accountant Michael Buckley to spend $2,500 to purchase a computer to be used by the DPW secretary to maintain cemetery records. The money will come from the Woodside Cemetery perpetual care fund that has a current balance of $142,675.

Although she voted for the expenditure, Selectman Diane Sullivan questioned why the cost was so high.

"Why spend $2,500 when you can buy computers much cheaper these days?" she asked.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said Buckley would buy a cheaper one if he could. Selectman Fred Koed speculated that the necessary software might contribute to the cost.

Train mitigation members needed

Selectman Diane Sullivan asks that any residents interested in serving on the Greenbush Mitigation Committee call the selectman's office at 383-4105.

"Tom Gruber (mitigation chairman) is spending an inordinate amount of time and he really needs some help," Sullivan said. She explained that the current process is the town's "last gasp" to get mitigation for its historic homes along the proposed railroad.

"Tom is working very hard to protect historic districts in town and he is pretty much doing it single-handedly," she said.

Apology to chamber

Selectmen said they were sorry about a miscommunication at last week's meeting on the village train station issue. They were erroneously under the impression that the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce had aligned itself with the planning board that supports the village station. Selectmen refused to reopen the station location debate.

But the chamber thought it had been invited to the meeting to present new information on the proposed station and was given short shrift by selectmen.

"David Drinkwater, who is the chamber president, was upset the way he was treated by the board last week," Selectman Tom Callahan said. "He thought we were rather hostile."

Selectmen had said they were only interested in hearing any new information on the issue — criteria that the chamber met with results of a survey it presented that showed business support for a village station had waned.

"They provided us with valuable information, they thought at our request," Selectman Ronnie McMorris said.

Last month selectmen received a letter from the planning board suggesting a joint meeting with the chamber on the issue.

"We took the letter that the chamber was 'in' with the planning board," Callahan said.

Selectman Fred Koed said the chamber was intimidated by the reaction it received.

"In the future, we should fall back a bit and listen to what someone has to say without assuming a position," he said.

Hydrant fee fight looms

Water commission chairman John K. McNabb, Jr. told selectmen that the water commission would ask for an increase in hydrant fees on the floor of town meeting.

That news sent Town Manager Mark Haddad into a rage.

"I will fight that," he said. "It is unfair for the water commission to come in three days before town meeting and let us know that's their intention."

Hydrant fees, which come from the tax base and not water revenue, help pay to maintain the infrastructure of the water distribution system and help cover the cost of fire flow protection for the entire town. Proponents say it's a fair way to assess those costs because some homes are on well water and North Cohasset is on Hingham water but both receive Cohasset fire protection.

Last year Haddad cut the hydrant fees by about $50,000 — which is nearly half — when the smallest of three overrides passed at the polls. He had hoped to restore the full funding this year but kept the hydrant fees level funded at last year's amount to help avoid the need for an override this year.

He said restoring the fees would cost two police officers, two firefighters or two teachers.

"That's the only place you'll find the money," he said.

The water department is still running at a surplus, although McNabb wasn't clear on how much.

"We have given this long, hard thought," McNabb said. "We don't think in the long run we can make it without the full amount."

Absentee ballots

Absentee ballots for the annual town election on April 8 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, April 7, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.

Physical disability.

Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person.

Committee rejects CHL transfer-station proposal

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset Heights, Ltd. owner Paul Barry has come up against yet another roadblock in his attempt to operate a solid waste facility on his property.

The town's CHL negotiating subcommittee unanimously rejected Barry's proposal for a recycling-transfer facility next to the closed CHL landfill.

"Under no circumstances will we consider agreeing to continuing any additional solid waste uses in that area," said Kevin Ulmer, chairman of the CHL subcommittee, which has been composed of members of the Board of Selectmen, Board of Health, Conservation Commission, and Zoning Board of Appeals.

Barry presented the transfer-station proposal to selectmen last month as a possible solution to the ongoing legal battles between the town and CHL. The landfill has been closed for two years, but litigation has ensued concerning a parcel of land next to the landfill known as Area 5, where Barry had hoped to expand.

In a townwide mailing to residents detailing his proposal for a transfer-station at Area 5, Barry said such a use of his property could put an end to legal disputes with the town.

Construction waste would be brought to the facility, where it would be separated into recyclable and non-recyclable items. Debris which could not be recycled would be shipped away in large trucks.

"This is a sensible solution to a longstanding dispute," Barry said. "The town has the opportunity to obtain its goal of ending the use of CHL as a landfill and generate substantial tax revenue."

Ulmer said the town does not have to approve the use of Area 5 as a transfer station in order to solve legal issues with CHL.

"CHL is trying to do an end run around the resolution that has been on the table by saying we have to choose between having a landfill in Area 5 or a trash transfer station," he said. "In fact, we can and should choose 'None of the Above,' which is the only choice which would be in the best interests of the town."

Barry said the monies generated from the commercial development of Area 5 could significantly help the town. He said Hingham Lumber, whose property may be impacted by the restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line, had expressed interest in relocating to Area 5.

"Real estate revenue from the development of Area 5, real estate tax revenue from the processing/recycling/transfer facility, and host community tipping fee revenue from the facility are additional incentives for the town," Barry said. "These financial benefits merit serious consideration at a time when we are talking about major infrastructure expenses such as school and library renovations."

John McNabb, a member of the anti-landfill citizen group Stop Any Further Expansion [SAFE], has developed a citizen's petition article for Saturday's town meeting which would prohibit a landfill or transfer station at CHL.

The article would change the light industrial zone on Route 3A, where CHL is located, to a technology business district. Businesses in fields such as biotechnology, technology research, electronics, and high-tech assembly would be allowed, while solid waste facilities would be prohibited.

McNabb has proposed changes in the past to the light industrial zone, which have been defeated at town meeting.

Water quality report gets top marks

The Water Quality Report sent to all residents of Cohasset last October by the Water Commission has been rated as the best in the nation of all of such Reports reviewed by the Campaign for Safe and Affordable Drinking Water (CSADW), a national coalition of environmental and consumer groups.

"We are proud that our report has received this important national recognition," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "In our Report, we tried hard to provide useful information to the residents of Cohasset about the source of their public drinking water and the quality of the water. The Report was prepared for us by Norfolk Environmental, who did a terrific job."

The Cohasset Water Quality Report received the highest rating of the 430 reports reviewed from 20 states and the District of Colombia, according to Lynn Thorp of the CSADW. These reports, mandated by EPA regulation, are also referred to as Water Right to Know Reports or Consumer Confidence Reports.

The Cohasset report received high marks for including a map of the watershed and for including the location and names of sources of pollution of the watershed - the only report reviewed that did so. The Cohasset report also received many bonus points for mailing the report to all residents of Cohasset, which was not required, and for describing the health effects of the contaminants detected in the water.

Out of 18 such reports from Massachusetts reviewed, for example, the Cohasset report received 120 points, far more than the nearest high score of 95 points.

These reports were mandated nationwide by the EPA, and require all local water suppliers to provide information to water consumers that describes the source of their drinking water, the contaminants found in the drinking water, and the health effects and sources of those contaminants.

The Campaign for Safe and Affordable Drinking Water is a nationwide alliance of consumer, environmental and public health organizations, including Clean Water Fund, the Consumer Federation of America, and U.S. PIRG.

State to enact ban on disposal of TV tubes

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

For those who have old or damaged televisions and computer monitors lying around the house, it is time to kiss them goodbye and send them on their way. Massachusetts will be the first state to enact a ban on the disposal of cathode ray tubes (CRTs) contained within TVs and computers, beginning April 1, after which time they will have to be segregated from trash and recycled.

The ban came about because of the dangers associated with the incineration of CRTs. The tubes contain lead, which, when incinerated can cause health risks due to the ash being inhaled or possible groundwater contamination.

"This ban is a necessity," said DEP municipal liaison for recycling and Marshfield resident Joseph Lambert. "Seventy percent of waste is going through incineration and that stuff is going up into the air and coming back down on us."

Besides health issues, there is also a problem of landfill space. According to the DEP, "Continued disposal of bulky electronic components in landfills will unnecessarily accelerate the pace at which the few remaining Massachusetts landfills will run out of space."

Luckily the South Shore Recycling Cooperative has received a DEP grant which will allow them to cover the expense of recycling TVs through June at no cost to the owners. There is no charge for the recycling of computers because they are able to generate money.

The South Shore Recycling Cooperative will use the state contract with Global Recycling Technologies of Stoughton at a cost of 15 cents/lb to 25 cents/lb or $5-10 each, depending on the quantity, plus the cost of handling by town service providers. The cooperative will cover these costs and then send a bill from Global Recycling to the state. Claire Sullivan of the SSRC says that Massachusetts is the first state in the country to institute the ban.

Peggy Harlow of the DEP said every town that applied this year received a grant. SSCR member towns that will be relieved of processing costs include Abington, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

The tubes contain lead, which, when incinerated can cause health risks due to the ash being inhaled or possible groundwater contamination.

The cooperative is first concerned with the repair and reuse of machines, according to Sullivan.

"We fix the machines or take parts from some and put them in others," she said.

"We don't want people to have liabilities on their hands. They should get rid of them now, not later because no one knows what will happen after June when the grant runs out."

Hingham DPW superintendent Joseph Stigliani says that an area has already been set up at the waste station where TVs and computers can be dropped off. But right now none of the 13 towns seem to have a definitive plan for what will happen when the grant expires. Because of this Harlow and the DEP are "encouraging residents to clean out their closets now."

At the end of June towns will have to either begin charging residents for the recycling of TVs and computer monitors, fund their processing through increased tax revenues or refuse to accept them at all.

Though Stigliani said, "The town will pay at this point. There is no plan to charge residents."

A concern for Stigliani is that some residents will dispose of televisions illegally because workers cannot keep track of all the trash people bring in. Not every car can be inspected and some things are bound to slip by, he said.

The DEP is also encouraging people to give unused TVs and computers to charities such as Big Brother Big Sister or the Salvation Army in hopes that some can be motivated to rid themselves of old machines by the thought of a tax write-off. But not even charitable donations are without problems.

There is a feeling that televisions as we know them will be obsolete in the coming years due to a switch in broadcast technology from analog to digital High Definition TV (HDTV) in 2006. This could leave charities with a glut of TVs and the charge of disposing of them.

Merle Brown of the Cohasset recycling committee does not predict any major problems in his town, but expects to see more and more TVs being recycled in the coming years because of HDTV. At this point it is anyone's guess who will pay for the processing.

The South Shore Recycling Cooperative recommends that the need to purchase new televisions should be carefully considered and new computer equipment should be leased rather than purchased, putting the burden of disposal on the manufacturer.

LIBRARY CORNER

Young adult video summer program

Public libraries on the South Shore are planning an innovative program for young adults this summer. Groups of teens, ages 12 to 19, will attend basic workshops on video production and camera techniques. Then each group will create an original video no more than 20 minutes long. A panel of local judges will view all entries and make awards. At the end of August, all contestants will be invited to the "Oscar Awards" at the Duxbury Library.

Local cable companies, including MediaOne, seem eager to lend their assistance and their production facilities to participating teens. Selected entries may be broadcast on local cable channels.

Right now, the library is looking for adult volunteers who enjoy working with young people and have video skills to advise and assist novice production crews. We will also need a panel of judges. For more information, or to donate a prize for our winners, call library director Janet Husband at 383-1348.

School project

We're hitting you over the head again this week with a gavel as a reminder to attend town meeting at 10 a.m. Saturday at the high school gym.

The big ticket item on the town meeting agenda is the $40 million-plus school project that, with state reimbursement, will cost Cohasset taxpayers about $16 million.

Over the past several weeks, we have printed letters and columns going over details about why the school project costs what it does and why it's necessary.

Many of you have made up your mind on whether to support the project. Others may still be on the fence about the plan to upgrade and expand the Deer Hill and middle-high schools.

It is not unusual to be swayed by town meeting debate. What's so great about that arena is that an issue can be thoroughly aired with proponents, opponents and those with questions all having equal time.

The truth is that while Cohasset turns out well-educated students — its school facilities are well below par and an embarrassment. You, as citizens, have the right to be both angry and concerned about that.

But rather than sit on the sidelines and complain, go to town meeting where you'll hear reasons for past decisions and the plans for the future. Then you can make an informed decision.

If the school project — which we support — passes muster at town meeting, it must still win a simple majority at the polls on April 8 where voters will be asked to pass a debt exclusion to pay for it. You won't be able to make a good choice at the polls without all the facts that will be explained and debated Saturday.

And don't forget there are several other important issues including another major project — the library —before town meeting.

Please be there.

A real fighter

Selectman Diane Sullivan attended her last regular selectman's meeting Tuesday. Mrs. Sullivan, who is moving, is not seeking reelection to a second, consecutive term. In the mid-1980s, she previously served a term as selectman.

During her tenure it hasn't been uncommon for the board of selectmen to vote 4-1, with Mrs. Sullivan casting the lone dissenting vote. While some may see her as not being a team player — we always respected her courage in standing up for what she felt was right often in the face of strong opposition.

Even this week when she could have justifiably sat back and not questioned anything, she was relentless in her pursuit of answers. She demanded an explanation of the special education deficit from the superintendent of schools and lectured the school committee chairman on why he should lead that board into taking a stand on the state's special education standard, the highest in the nation.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who has locked horns with her on occasion, said she'd be missed.

"I enjoyed working with you. It's been a pleasure, I mean it," he said.

True to form, she didn't let Mr. Haddad get the last word.

"You were one of our better decisions," Sullivan laughed.

Like it or not, town meeting attendees Saturday can expect that Mrs. Sullivan will be a familiar figure at the microphone. And you can take that to the bank.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Barry clarifies two issues

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is written in response to letters appearing in your last edition regarding to issues: (1) my proposal for a processing/recycling/transfer facility, and (2) the proposed zoning change on the town warrant.

As many of you are already aware, I have informally proposed the development of a processing/recycling/transfer facility on the Cohasset Heights, LTD ("CHL") property. If I obtain approval for such a facility, I am willing to waive my rights to pursue permits for additional landfill space in Area V of the CHL property. The town has asked me to make this concession as part of an agreement governing the closure of the landfill. Despite Mr. Whittemore's assertions, there is no threat or extortion contained in my proposal. I am merely proposing a solution that allows me to use my land in a manner consistent with my interests and consistent with the town's interest in preventing further landfilling.

Real estate tax revenue from the development of Area V (for use by Hingham Lumber), real estate tax revenue from the processing/recycling/transfer facility, and host community tipping fee revenue from the processing/recycling/transfer facility are additional incentives for the town. These financial benefits merit serious consideration at a time when we are talking about major infrastructure expenses such as school and library renovations.

With regard to the proposed zoning change on the Town Warrant (Article 16), John McNabb has presented a similar proposal on three prior occasions. Each time, the town has voted against the proposal. Mr. McNabb is attempting to alter long-standing zoning rules for one purpose — stopping CHL from using its property. Property owners other than CHL purchased property in the industrial zoned district based on its existing zoning. The proposed zoning change will effect the value of their property. Other people have explained at past Town Meetings that changing zoning rules is not the proper venue for carrying out personal battles. Please vote against this proposal again.

Graduates support school project

TO THE EDITOR:

We are graduates of the Cohasset Public School system, as are our sisters, brothers, and even some of our aunts and uncles. The free public education that our families received in Cohasset provided a solid foundation for citizenship and for careers in fields ranging from medicine, basic science and electronics to finance, publishing and arts education. With our first child starting kindergarten, we've returned to the Cohasset Public Schools. We have been impressed by the new Joseph Osgood School and by the quality of the education that our daughter receives.

However, we were amazed to see the deterioration of the Deer Hill and Middle/High School buildings since we graduated 17 and 19 years ago. While the quality of the teachers and students is more important than the physical plant, it is clear that the older school buildings are in disrepair and in violation of safety codes and the Americans with Disabilities Act. Furthermore, the classrooms are not set up for education at a time when the computer has become as basic a learning tool as notebooks and blackboards.

It will be difficult to stomach the tax increase that the necessary renovations require. However, the 60 percent state reimbursement, for which Cohasset has obtained written confirmation, makes the School Facility Committee's renovation proposal the most economical solution that we are likely to see. Half-measures that don't meet regulatory mandates, address educational priorities, or qualify for state funding, do not offer true economy in the long run. As Cohasset graduates, parents and taxpayers, we support the school renovation project as a sensible and necessary measure to ensure that a Cohasset Public School education will continue to provide a solid foundation for students' future lives and careers.

School projects

TO THE EDITOR

As a Cohasset resident and parent of a young son, I am in full support of the current initiative to improve our school facilities and I urge all eligible voters to show up for Town Meeting this Saturday and to vote yes on April 8.

Great schools are the hallmark of a great community. Not only do schools provide that our town's youth have access to quality educational opportunities, they also impact our property values and quality of life in general.

My wife and I moved here because Cohasset is the kind of place where you can safely raise a family and take immense pride in your community. That security is now in jeopardy. The current condition of the Deer Hill and Middle/High schools is unacceptable. Fortunately, our town government has worked hard to give us the opportunity to rectify this situation efficiently and with 60 percent reimbursement from the Commonwealth.

This opportunity exists within a rapidly closing window. Supporting this project now will lock-in our reimbursement guarantee and secure the future of Cohasset for all its residents. Voting no will only guarantee regret, excessive costs and uncertainty.

It has been stressed repeatedly that doing nothing is not an option and whether you have children in the schools or not is irrelevant to this issue.

The bottom line is that our facilities are old and need extensive repairs for which the town is responsible for making. If we don't act now, these repairs will cost us more money over the long run and we could be without a guarantee of funding from the Commonwealth. In fact, cost overruns in the Big Dig have all but ensured where most of the future state funding will be dedicated.

Yes, there are many valid concerns surrounding this issue, especially the rising cost of living in Cohasset and whether these facilities will be properly maintained. As a community we should address these concerns responsibly and quickly. However, voting no against this project because of these issues is akin to cutting off your nose to spite your face. We are required to bring our school facilities up-to-date and in compliance with federal and state mandates. This is our collective responsibility.

Again, for the sake of our town an its future, I urge you to attend town meeting this Saturday and to vote yes on April 8.

Police, fire station

TO THE EDITOR:

As Chairman of the Police/Fire Space Committee I would like to address some concerns that have recently been expressed regarding the possible relocation of the Police Department to the rear of the Old Osgood School. If a need is determined this may be one of four possibilities currently under review. The other options include the i) renovation and enlargement of the existing facility, ii) a new facility on other Town owned land, and iii) a new facility on other land that may be available.

The Committee was formed two months ago to review the space requirements for both the Police and Fire Departments and to make a recommendation to the town for any action that may be required. Our first meeting included a tour of the existing facility on Elm Street. We discovered offices have been made out of broom closets and are shared. The PALS, Safety and Animal Control officers are relegated to the basement storage area which regularly floods. There is no space for roll call, training or a lunchroom. Four sergeants share one office with the department secretary.

At this time the Committee has issued a Request for Proposals for professional assistance to review all options available to the Police and Fire Department to satisfy this dilemma. The funding for this request appears as Article 9 at the March 25 Town Meeting. We believe it is important for both the Police and Fire Departments to have facilities that meet minimum standards to ensure their continued exemplary performance. We intend on researching all options available and hope that there may be other sites not currently on our radar screen that may become available.

Regarding the Old Osgood, we understand there are members of the community who may not believe a police station is the best use of the surplus facility, either for its proximity to the pro-

Middle-high school accreditation review

In the year 2002 the Cohasset Middle-High School will undergo its 10-year accreditation review. Every 10 years each public high school is visited by a team of about a dozen professional educators under the auspices of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, our regional accreditation agency. In three and a half days these educators examine all aspects of a school's operation and make judgments about our school based on the seven standards of this organization. This association eventually issues a detailed report listing strengths and weaknesses while at the same time making a good number of recommendations for improvement.

EDUCATION MATTERS

After studying this report, The New England Association of Schools and Colleges gives clear accreditation for the next 10 years or gives accreditation provided certain conditions are met in a reasonable period of time or puts the school on probation until certain criteria are met or eventually denies accreditation. Clearly, the Cohasset Middle-High School wants and expects a full accreditation.

As principal of our school I have been very pleased at the progress our town is making in formulating plans for the renovation of our school. However, if we are ultimately successful in voting these plans, the accreditation process will proceed much more smoothly. As mentioned earlier, there are seven standards: for purposes of this discussion I will focus on number seven "Community Resources for Learning."

Under this standard are 11 "indicators" for each of which our faculty and our community must give evidence that we have met or exceeded the association's expectations. Five of these deal directly with our school building and the site itself. Space does not allow a full discussion of each, but they are as follows.

The school site, plant and equipment shall support and enhance all aspects of the educational program and support services for student learning.

The school site, plant, and equipment shall be maintained to ensure an environment that is healthy and safe for all occupants.

There shall be a planned and adequately funded program of building and site management that ensures the maintenance and repair of facilities and equipment as well as the thorough and ongoing cleaning of the facility.

There shall be ongoing planning to address future program, staffing, facility and technology needs as well as capital improvements.

The physical plant and facilities shall meet all applicable federal and state laws and be in compliance with local fire, health and safety regulations.

Throughout the fall and early winter a full discussion of the physical deterioration of our plant has taken place. In fact, many community members have toured the school for a first hand, detailed look at the facility. Our many, many problems related to electrical service, plumbing, heating, roofs and communication systems have been delineated over and over. Special emphasis has been given to the necessary code compliance issues in these areas and particularly in the area of handicap accessibility. However, what can one expect from a 40- to 50-year-old building?

A more important issue relates to our academic program! In the year 2001-2002 alone our middle school population will increase 40 to 50 students with just grades 7 and 8. With the grade 6-8 configuration the school population doubles by 2007-2008. We will need a "third-team" in 2001-2002 and will have a fourth team once the sixth grade joins the middle school. We will not only need space for the "core team" teachers at both points, but we will obviously need space for additional teachers of art, reading, health, physical education and foreign language to name a few.

Presently, in the middle school two teachers, two aides, and a language specialist share one special needs classroom while in the high school two special needs teachers and three instructional aides share one classroom. More rooms are needed!

Space does not allow further detailing of our physical needs such as locker facilities, water fountain installations, window replacements and a near total external door replacement for security purposes. Nor does space allow a discussion of other room problems in the high school's core academic areas as our population increases: additional classrooms will be needed for English, math, social studies and foreign language.

In sum, our physical and programmatic needs have been well documented over the past many months. As we begin our accreditation process next fall (our self-study), we as a community want to be able to show that the Cohasset Middle-High School is ready to respond to the academic demands and challenges of this new century. A modern, functional facility is a necessity for us to reach that goal.

Curt Collins is principal of the middle high school.

Funding of the school renovation projects

In an effort to answer many of the questions surrounding the funding of the proposed renovations and additions to the Deer Hill Elementary School and middle high school, I would like to take this opportunity to explain how the town of Cohasset will fund the projects.

LOCAL VIEW

MARK HADDAD

Article 13 of the 2000 Annual Town Meeting to be held Saturday, March 25, requests that the town authorize the borrowing of $41,800,000. In order to borrow these funds, two-thirds of those present and voting at the town meeting will have to approve this authorization. In addition to town meeting approval, the article requires the approval of a Proposition 2-1/2 Debt Exclusion Override. A Debt Exclusion Override allows the town to raise the necessary funds to pay back the debt service on a project outside the levy limit. A question requesting the approval of this override will appear on the April 8, town election ballot as Question One. This override requires the approval of a majority of those voting on the question. Should both Article 13 and the override question be approved, the town will be authorized to begin the projects. It is important to understand that the town has applied for and received approval from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts School Building Assistance Board for 60-percent reimbursement of the total cost of this project. Therefore, the state will reimburse the town 60 percent of the total principal and interest payments over 20 years for this project.

Article 13 also requests that the Cohasset School Facilities Committee serve as the building committee for this project. It is their intention to bid this project in the fall of 2000 and begin construction in March, 2001. The architect has estimated that the Deer Hill project will take 18 months to complete and the middle high school project will take 3.5 years. Taking this into consideration is extremely important in determining the funding schedule for this project. Based on this schedule the town will phase the actual borrowing of the full amount of the project over the next four years. This is done for a couple of reasons. First of all, the town can expect to receive the state reimbursement in four years. The state began the reimbursement payments of the Osgood Elementary Project after three years and both Town Accountant Michael Buckley and I are confident that we should receive this funding within four years. Secondly, the town will use bond anticipation notes (BANs) over the next four years to fund the construction phase of the project. We will not permanently borrow these funds until the state reimbursement begins. This will allow the town the maximum amount of time (20 years) to pay back the full loan. According to state law, the town is able to defer principal payments on BANs for a maximum of five years for school building projects listed on the state Department of Education's school building priority list. The town will only be required to pay the interest on these notes. These interest payments will then be rolled into the total state reimbursement amount as was the case with the Osgood School reimbursement.

With state reimbursement and approval of the residents to raise the town's 40-percent share outside the limitations of Prop. 2-1/2, the town will begin paying back this project in fiscal year 2004. The town will be responsible for the interest payments on the BANs from fiscal year 2002 through fiscal year 2004. We anticipate paying approximately 5-percent interest on the BANs and 6-percent interest on the permanent borrowing. Based on this, Cohasset taxpayers can expect to be paying for this project over the next 22 years. Michael Buckley has estimated that the average taxpayer in Cohasset (a home valued in FY 2000 at $358,500) can expect to pay a total of $10,291 over this period. This averages out to $467.77 per year or $38.98 per month.

Both Michael Buckley and I believe this is an accurate assessment of what the town can expect for the repayment of the funding for this project.

COHASSET CARES

Objectivity, subjectivity and PAYT

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Saturday, March 25, your vote can make a difference. As in so many other aspects of American life, we have to use our heads again. But it's fun, isn't it? And besides, it's a tremendous privilege. We're a lucky lot. But we're selfish, you know? We're spoiled. We not only love being warm and well fed, we love all the extras. And then we tend to get insulated — me-centered. Sorry, getting preachy. Back to facts.

Cohasset presently has a flat-fee trash disposal system. What we pay for a dump sticker pays for half of the disposal cost; the other half we pay for through taxes. Cohasset's disposal costs are determined by dividing total tons by total population. We pay not only for our individual five pounds per day [the average American produces five pounds of trash each day], each of us also pays for the excess beyond the five pounds produced by the other guy in Cohasset.

It's interesting to watch the gas prices climb each day, isn't it? It would be nice to have some control over these costs. Of course, we don't want to consider the obvious.... Preachy again. Facts.

I quote from the current EPA PAYT Bulletin: "Portland, Maine started its [PAYT] program in July 1990.... 'Compliance has been fantastic. Even those residents who were initially opposed became proponents once they understood how it worked,' reports Troy Moon, commercial waste program administrator...."

PAYT allows us to pay for exactly what we use, no more. If we want to cut back/save even more money, that's both an objective and a subjective issue. I recommend we vote thoughtfully. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Qualified candidate

The Republicans appear to have wised up and are about to choose a candidate with the best possible credentials to run for the Senate against our Ted Kennedy.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Jack E. Robinson could be a Kennedy clone when it comes to driving an automobile or dating a nubile young woman.

No sooner had Jack E. III announced his plans to run last week than nosey folks started pawing through court records to see what they could find.

This is a knee-jerk reaction in Massachusetts where a new candidate is not asked, "Where do you stand?" but "What have they got on you?"

They found a drunken driving arrest and a restraining order taken out by a young woman who claimed that the candidate harassed her sexually.

Does that sound like any other politician you might know?

Jack E. III went on to explain that the DWI charge was dropped and the woman, well, she was a nut case who harassed him.

I don't see why he bothered.

As far as I know, such a record is one of the finest qualifications for public office that a Bay State resident can have.

After all, wasn't Jim Curley once run alderman in Boston while serving a 90-day jail sentence for taking a civil service exam for another man?

"He did it for a friend," they said and he was elected.

And didn't he run for and win the mayor's office after serving five months in the federal pen in Danbury for using the U. S. mails to defraud?

Wasn't Ted Kennedy himself elected to the U. S. Senate after being ejected or kicked out of Harvard for hiring another student to take a Spanish exam for him so he'd be eligible for the football team?

And then there was that unfortunate auto mishap on an island off the Massachusetts coast that earned him two months suspended and loss of license for a year for leaving the scene of an accident.

We're a forgiving lot, we Massachusetts voters.

The drunken driving charge against Jack E. III was later dismissed when he passed a breathalyzer test but it led one of the finest campaign opening lines of the new millennium.

"I guess it's fair to say that neither the senator nor I have a stellar motor vehicle record," said the candidate.

Who said Republicans don't have a sense of humor?

Jack E. III said the woman who obtained the restraining order was an old girl friend who just couldn't believe that he was breaking up with her. The order was later vacated.

And, oh, yes, there was that little matter of the concealed weapon charge that was lodge against him when police found a martial arts Shuriken star in his jacket pocket. He didn't know where it came from.

This is a variation of what lawyers call "the some dude defense," in which a defendant tells the judge, "I was just standing there when some dude came along and said 'Here, hold this bag of crack for me.'"

"This is the game of politics and I am learning that quickly," said Jack E. III.

Right. Drunken driving? Restraining order? Concealed weapon? That should be good for a half million votes in Massachusetts.

posed new library or because of the playground currently on the site. Please note that no decisions have been made at this early stage. It has merely been identified as the only available surplus building currently owned by the Town so it should be included in the survey. If a better use for that facility is warranted and produces cash flow from rent then it may be practical and economical to locate a new facility elsewhere with those proceeds, thereby reducing or eliminating the need for additional taxes. It is the intention of the Committee to find the best option that takes into account the ultimate cost to the town, efficiency for the operations of the departments, location of the new facility, if any, and any mitigation of effects of its final location.

We hope that all residents attend this week's Town Meeting and respond positively to Article 9.

Olde Salt House plans

ZONING BOARD OF APPEALS:

Some three years ago, when the prior owner attempted to get a liquor license for the property, some Cohasset residents attended the hearing before the Alcohol Beverage Control Commission. Among those attending were Merle Brown, Martha Gjesteby, the Knowles, the Galligans, Rich Henderson and myself. Our opposition consisted of concerns for parking, security and the fact there were 10 youngsters in homes adjacent to the property. The license request was refused. Today, there are six more children or 16, living in five homes, numbers 15 (3), 17 (6), 23 (2), 31 (2) and 43 (3) Border Street.

When Peter Roy opened Atlantica, there was, I felt, a problem with restaurant employees parking on Border Street for their entire shift. Speaking about the problem with Peter, he appeared to resolve these parking problems by allowing employees to park in the Old Salt House lot. Presently, Atlantica management wants to open Olde Salt House inside and outside adding substantially more noise, cars and congestion from 96 outdoor seats and 28 indoor seats on top of an already overstressed area. I urge each of you to drive by Atlantica (if you are able) during a busy weekend with a wedding or other function and a summer dining crowd trying to park their cars. Then picture adding Olde Salt House dining and functions to what is hardly a neighborhood-friendly business. I would urge the Z.B.A. to substantially limit the number of seats allowed on the property and forbid functions. It is very easy for Attorney Humphrey to say that there will be, "far more management, far more control than with the site's previous use." That, to me, is an absurd claim for the plan is to expand the use of this property many, many times.

My parking thought is to limit parking on Border Street between the hotel and the restaurant to residents only. After all, Attorney Humphrey says, "heavy valet services" will address the parking needs of the restaurants. Think of the revenue to Cohasset from tickets issued by our police department to parking scofflaws. Finally, with the number of children in this neighborhood, we pray there is no accident waiting to happen.

It does seem unfair to ask the neighbors to bear such a large impact from a profit-making enterprise.

Village station

TO THE EDITOR

I have read with great interest the debate of whether or not the MBTA commuter rail station should be on Rte. 3A or in the Village.

For a perfect example to see how commuter rail can not only co-exist with a business "village" but actually draw shoppers, I invite all interested Cohasset residents to head to the North Shore to the Town of Manchester-By-The-Sea.

School coffees

TO THE EDITOR:

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee have been attending information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools throughout February and March. We would like to thank all those involved with hosting the 31 information gatherings and the people who were able to attend them.

Hopefully, we have been able to clearly state the essential reasons for approving this renovation project now. Your questions and input have greatly influenced the direction of the project. It has been our intent that the community would have a voice in the development of our renovation plan through these information events. Wonderful ideas have been generated and the architects have been able to incorporate many of them into the plans.

If you have not had the opportunity to have your questions answered or your suggestions heard, please attend our final coffee on Thursday, March 23, at 7:30 p.m. It will be at the home of Betsy and Ed Connolly at 1 Lily Pond Lane. Call 383-1248 for additional information.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman and planning board candidates: Could you support Paul Barry's proposal for a transfer station at Cohasset Heights?

SELECTMAN/ Robert Sturdy

Since the town is involved in litigation in a matter that relates to this week's question, as an elected town official I do not think it is appropriate for me to comment on this question.

SELECTMAN/ Leland Jenkins

Trash is a fact of modern life and a problem that's always going to be there. On the table now is whether the CHL site should be allowed to be used for any type of trash capacity. The current proposal involves allowing CHL to use the existing site for an enclosed processing recycling transfer facility or changing the zoning.

If the town wants to rezone this 100-acre plus area from light industrial to technology business what other uses can we see? It would be unable to be used for solid waste disposal ever again and residential use would also be prohibited. Suggestions for the area have included the assembly of electronic and computer equipment, Internet commerce and research facilities including biotechnology.

If it remains used for solid waste recycling can the town of Cohasset be assured that no further dumping will ever be done on the site and the proposed recycle transfer center poses absolutely no environmental hazard to our water supply? But this question can also be asked of a biotechnology firm or a computer manufacturing business which uses highly toxic materials.

It is important to make the decisions that are going to be in the best interest of the town from both an environmental and financial point of view. If CHL can safely recycle trash with definite restrictions as to all types of pollution and not expand the landfill capacity then we should carefully consider the proposal.

SELECTMAN/ Michael Sullivan

The Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) has been a challenge for the Town for many years. It would be astonishing to add up all the volunteer, elected, and paid hours that have been spent on behalf of the Town dealing with CHL issues.

The major challenge is the State has more control over landfills and transfer stations than the Town and the State is certainly not as concerned about Cohasset as we are. There were documented instances in the past that confirmed CHL was adversely affecting the environment, such as odor, contaminated run off, and underground migration of contaminants and we were unable to get support from the State.

My main concern on the latest proposal is what it could become. Projects like this have the potential to grow beyond their original plans bringing adverse effects to the community. The State would always prefer to expand an existing facility rather than fight to site a new one. As in the past, we should work to protect our community.

PLANNING BOARD/ Chris Ford

My familiarity with Paul Barry's proposal for a recycling center at his present landfill site is limited to my reading of the townwide mailing sent out by Mr. Barry. Paul makes a strong case for the use that he proposes and I feel we should, as a community, give this proposal thorough consideration.

If I understand the proposal correctly, the proposed use would be physically contained and therefore would not adversely impact our water supply. I understand that there are other environmental concerns that must be addressed including the amount and character of commercial traffic to the site. The planning Board will have to thoroughly review these issues as part of its evaluation process for this proposed usage. Based on the limited information that I have to date, I am inclined to support the Barry proposal as an accepted usage for this site as long as the appropriate conditions are in place to prevent any potential adverse impact to the environment.

PLANNING BOARD/ Randy Patterson

While I respect Mr. Barry's desire to continue to remain in the rubbish disposal business, I am opposed to his current proposition of a commercial recycling transfer facility on his Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) for the following reasons:

Mr. Barry states that in order to make this facility profitable, he will need to collect 500 tons of material per day. Yet, it appears that CHL's highest previous rate was 300 tons per day. To make up this 40 percent shortfall, solid waste from other towns will have to be hauled into Cohasset. I fail to see how transporting solid waste from other towns into Cohasset will be to Cohasset's benefit.

Mr. Barry's proposal will result in an increase of trucks driving through town on a daily basis. And with each truckload brings an increased risk of having toxic solid waste enter Cohasset.

Every town has commercial solid waste and Cohasset should look for ways to remove this waste. It would appear Mr. Barry is attempting to deal with this issue, however, he is going about it in the wrong manner by using this proposal as a negotiating tactic against his ongoing legal battles with the town.

If Mr. Barry is serious with his proposal, he should keep it "separate" from his ongoing legal issues and present it to Cohasset on its own worth. I truly believe his proposal would be greater received if it only involved the removal of Cohasset's waste.

School committee candidates: If the new school project goes ahead, sixth-graders will be moved to the middle-high school. Are some parents' concerns justified that sixth-graders are too young to be in the same building with high school students?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Chartis Tebbetts

Parents are always justified to be concerned about their children's school experience. At this point, I am satisfied that this particular concern has been appropriately recognized.

The Middle School concept has long been a part of Cohasset's educational program. It was called the Junior High, for grades 7 and 8. Most educators today favor a three grade Middle School concept, grouping grades 6-8 together. In general, clusters of three grades together work better than two grade clusters. Children in grades six, seven, and eight have much in common, but of course there can be vast differences as well. There may be some sixth graders that are small in stature and closer to fifth graders in maturity and size, but most will feel quite comfortable around other kids age 11-14. Teachers of these three grades have special training, skills, and sensitivities to the needs of this age group.

The big issue is separation from students in high school, who are usually quite a bit larger in size and more mature than kids 11-14. Cohasset has recognized this, and will continue to keep the two groups separate. In the renovation plan, the two schools will be sharing the same site and a few facilities, including the auditorium, new cafeteria, and new library/media center — there simply isn't an alternative area in the town where a separate campus could be built. However, the Middle School will have its own entrance and will feel like a totally separate school, with its own administrative area, classrooms and computer and language labs, and gym.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Rick Flynn

Under the Dept. of Education's reimbursement plan for school buildings, the schools should be set up for a 50 year useful life. Looking ahead for that kind of time span the view of the education community is that sixth graders are better served in their education needs by interacting with seventh and eighth graders. Thus the School Committee, working with school administrators, has decided, after much research and study, that now is the time for grade realignment.

Although there has been some concern in moving sixth graders to the Middle/ High School, parents should be reassured and excited about the renovation plan for the Middle/ High School. The proposed plan does an even better job, than currently exists, in separating the Middle School students from the High School students. At the same time, the opportunity to enhance and improve the separate identity of the Middle School is being created. By moving the locations of the gymnasium, cafeteria, locker rooms and other facilities to a more common core the necessity of the Middle School students to interact with the High School students has been reduced to a very small level. At the same time the Middle School will have its own entrance so students can come and go independently.

I think a great job has been done by the School Facilities Committee working the architect as well as the community to put forth a creative and forward looking renovation plan for the Middle/High School.

Library trustee: What can the library do to protect its youngest patrons from the dangers of the Internet?

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Agnes McCann

The library is by definition a source of information free to all, and should be.

I think it would be difficult to institute a system of screening for age-appropriateness of material available through the Internet any different than that historically in place for other sources: common sense in concert with parental guidance and responsibility.

The Board of Trustees voted some time ago to recommend a Grade 6-and-over cut-off for unmonitored Internet use, and it is a guideline I feel is reasonably practical and effective, without being offensive.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Lance Norris

The Internet is not evil beast that will grab your children and drag them down into its foul recesses. The free flow of ideas should never be feared or repressed. While the Internet is filled with sites that are inappropriate for children, those sites have to be accessed by the user. They are not just sitting there waiting to jump out at you. There are a number of filters available for web browsers that can limit access to most of those sites.

To get on the net at the library you must sign up. The on-line browsing history of each computer terminal can easily be reviewed at the end of the day. If age inappropriate material is found, a warning could be mailed to the child that was signed up (and their parents) informing them that the materials down-loaded during the time they were signed on was not appropriate for a public library, and if happens again the child will lose Internet access privileges at the library.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Patience Towle

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library's Internet policy pertaining to children is currently "As is the case with all other library materials, any restriction of a child's access to the Internet is the responsibility of the child's parent or legal guardian. Nonetheless we would recommend that any child not yet in grade six be accompanied by said parent or legal guardian when using the Internet." Additionally, the Internet is not to be used for games or chat rooms.

Although sensitive to the standards and civil liberties of all, I agree with these restrictions because it is possible to be inadvertently exposed to pornography on the Internet. Moreover, where freedom of information is not such an issue, such as at home or at school, I believe that filters may be of use. Our librarians can direct concerned parents of children of all ages to articles and web sites discussing good standards for Internet use.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Carol Riley

As a trustee of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, I, along with my fellow trustees and the director of the library, in August 1999 developed a formal "Internet Policy" for users of our three on-line computers. To quote from the policy: "Internet workstations are located in the Adult Reference Room. Before using one of these, users must present their library card and sign the register kept at the main service desk…the library's Internet workstations are not 'filtered.' The Library prohibits the transmission of any materials in violation of any federal or state regulation. This includes, but is not limited to: copyrighted material, threatening or obscene material, pornographic material or material protected by trade secret…As is the case with all other library materials, any restriction of a child's access to the Internet is the responsibility of the child's parent or legal guardian. Nonetheless, we would recommend that children not yet in grade six, be accompanied by a parent or guardian when using the Internet." As a candidate for re-election, I support this policy.

Next week's questions

For selectman: With seats up for grabs on the health board, recreation commission and housing authority – would you support making these boards appointed rather than elected?

For planning board: Cohasset is a beautiful town, but much of Rte. 3A is an eyesore – especially when compared to Scituate and part of Hingham and Marshfield that share the state roadway. What can the planning board do to improve the way 3A looks?

For school committee candidates: Due to low numbers, the high school gymnastics team successfully merged with Norwell High's team. Would you support offering some high school courses on a regional basis as a cost saving measure?

For library trustee: Is the library too dependent on volunteers to provide the service the town needs?

Answers must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Responses, which must be no more than 250 words, may be e-mailed to mford@cnc.com, sent by fax to 741-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. For more information, call Mary Ford 741-2933. Candidates, opposed or unopposed are welcome to submit photos and formal announcements of their candidacies The Mariner will also publish a candidates corner which is limited to a few lines from any candidate who wishes to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like. The Mariner would also like to hear from any write-in candidates for open seats on the board of health, recreation commission and housing authority. Candidates are encouraged to advertise their campaigns in the Mariner by contacting Bill Murphy at 781-837-4559.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Margaret (Peggy) Chapman

Chapman running for the health board

Margaret (Peggy) Chapman, R.N., today announced she is running as a write-in candidate for the Cohasset Board of Health.

"I have long had an interest in community health and environmental concerns," said Chapman, a registered nurse. She lives at 25 Virginia Lane with her husband, John, and her three children Mark (15), Cecelia (12), and Anne (10), and is employed as a psychiatric outpatient nurse for Hardy Healthcare, P.C. in Hingham. She has worked as both a psychiatric nurse and as a medical nurse.

"I am running," said Chapman, "because I believe my experience and training, including my over 20 years as a nurse, and from living in Woburn before moving to Cohasset, have prepared me well to deal with the diverse responsibilities of the board of health."

"I lived in Woburn 1983-1992, just after the contaminated wells had been shut down but before the full extent of the contamination was known," said Chapman. "Our drinking water had to be checked periodically for contaminants, and my husband and I were very concerned about what toxins we may have been exposed to."

Chapman has been a member of SAFE since 1994, and took an active role in the 1996 Site Assignment Hearings in 1996 to oppose the proposed Area V expansion of the Cohasset Heights landfill.

Chapman is a member of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. She received her BA in nursing from Creighton University, Omaha, Nebraska in 1976, and a Masters in Science, Child and Adolescent Psychiatric Nursing from Boston University in 1982. She has been active in nursing associations, is a member of the South Shore Coalition of Independent Therapists and served as New England Secretary/Treasurer for the Association of Child and Adolescent Psychiatric Nursing 1982-1988.

Randall "Randy" Patterson

Patterson to run for the planning board

Randall "Randy" Patterson is proud to announce his candidacy for the Cohasset Planning Board. Within his two years as a resident of Cohasset, he has been exposed to town politics through his neighborhood's fight against a cell tower going up on the Scituate/Cohasset border. In dealing with the various Scituate town boards, he quickly became disappointed with the town's lack of concern in preserving the town and protecting its residents. To the contrary, his experience with the various Cohasset town boards has been quite positive. He has found the discussions to be intelligent, adhering to local and state laws, and with a sincere concern for acting in the best interest of the town and its residents. It is important to Patterson to keep this tradition going and to contribute his time and energy to help Cohasset plan for the future in a way that balances preservation with progress and that represents the residents of Cohasset.

Patterson is a Senior Property & Casualty Claims Consultant for Aon Risk Services in Boston. Through his job, Patterson has extensive experience in facilitating, negotiating, and resolving simple to complex issues between his clients and the multiple insurance companies who pay and deny its claims. Working with risk managers, lawyers, and claim representatives, Patterson continually reviews insurance policy language and legal issues to achieve the best possible outcome.

It is Patterson's intent to bring these valued skills to Cohasset's Planning Board and meet the needs of the town and its residents by adhering to Town by-laws, looking ahead, and achieving compromise among various parties, who often have their own interests in mind.

Patterson has a degree in Economics from the University of Connecticut and a MBA from the University of Hartford. Patterson is married to wife Jean, and they are expecting their first child in August. He is an avid Toastmasters speaker, serves as a Trustee for the Ledgewood Estates Homeowners Association and enjoys Golf and Salt Water Fishing.

Lee Jenkins

Jenkins announces candidacy for selectman

Leland H. Jenkins is announcing his candidacy for the open seat on the Board of Selectmen created by Selectman Diane Sullivan's decision not to seek re-election.

I decided to run for the open seat based on my business background and my two terms on the Advisory Committee because I feel that I have something positive and concrete to offer the town. As a businessman, I have managed my own corporation for more than 25 years and know what it takes to keep a company operating cost-effectively. As a recent Advisory Committee member I am able to come into the job with a working knowledge of all town budgets. While on that committee, I did not hesitate to ask the probing and pertinent questions, and always cast ballots with the goal of keeping our town operating efficiently.

Cohasset must remain a diverse community. We must not allow the loss of residents on fixed incomes whose C.O.L.A. raises cannot compete with the raises in real estate taxes created by unrestrained spending.

I am a fiscal conservative who believes in excellence in education with academics as the top priority. Both of my children are graduates of the Cohasset system and I remain committed to public education. Our children deserve safe, well-maintained, substance-free facilities that we can afford to operate and maintain without compromising our ability to provide the educational supplies and equipment necessary to keep them on the cutting edge.

I will work hard to maintain a balance of sensible spending and efficient, reliable services for our community.

Lacrosse teams break into two separate divisions

By Mark Ducharme
CORRESPONDENT

Weymouth High boys lacrosse coach Tony Manzelli must feel like a gardener these days as he has watched the sport that he has coached for three decades grow.

When Manzelli, who is also the chairman of the MIAA lacrosse tournament, began coaching in 1972 at Weymouth North there were around 10 schools playing high school lacrosse.

According to Manzelli, there will be 72 schools in the MIAA playing lacrosse this season which includes schools the size of Weymouth and Newton North all the way down in boys enrollment to schools such as Cohasset and Hanover which will begin varsity play.

With lacrosse's growth in popularity, the MIAA has one from one division to two divisions beginning this year.

"The numbers have grown so much that we had to go to two divisions or else we would have to end the regular season in mid- May," said Manzelli. "We had too many teams in the tournament last season."

"There were about a quarter of the teams that there are now when I started," added Hingham boys lacrosse coach John Todd. "There are about 15 or 20 more teams on the horizon."

"By the end of last year we had only 14 players on our team.If I had played a football schedule like that with those numbers they would have me committed."
Cohasset AD Clark Chatterton

Hanover is beginning varsity play while schools such as Braintree, Scituate and New Bedford will play a junior varsity schedule this season eventually moving up to varsity play in the near future.

A year ago, 32 teams qualified for the tournament in lacrosse. There were almost 35 teams that qualified, but three schools were knocked out in their last game of the season which would have made scheduling the tournament very difficult, according to Manzelli.

Return of the race

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's Road Race By-the-Sea is proof perfect that a tough course won't keep runners away if it is a well-run event. The fact that the race has averaged 740 finishers the last four years is proof enough that the 24-member Rotary Club knows the work behind staging a quality 10K event.

This year's race should offer more of the same when the starting gun is fired on April 2 at 1p.m. next to Cohasset Common. Race director Tom Gruber is hoping to this year's field will rival that of the 1,200 runners who turned out a few years back.

"I'd like to come close to that," said Gruber, who will have an army of nearly 100 volunteers manning the scenic 6.2-mile course and the finish line.

The event is a popular one in Cohasset and unofficially marks the beginning of spring in town. Last year's race was anything but spring-like as 537 runners crossed the finish line on a cold, raw day. A spitting rain and biting wind made for unusually slow times. Randolph's Mel Gonsalves won easily after taking the lead near the mile mark and cruising to the finish in 32 minutes 40 seconds. The victory was the second in three years for Gonsalves, who had to settle for the runner-up position in 1998. Hingham's Katherine Merra was the first woman with a time of 40:27.

The course is among the most scenic in New England, let alone Massachusetts, and has been ranked by New England Runner magazine as one of the most picturesque courses of the six states.

Charlestown's Tom Lynch bested Gonsalves in that 1998 race in 32:53 as 815 runners answered the starting gun, six more than 1997. Plymouth's Mary Lynn-Currier blazed the route and buried the women's field by a whopping 2:52 to finish eighth overall in 34:53. Gonsalves (32:19) and Sarah Nixon of Medfield (36:39) captured the men's and women's titles in 1997, while Arthur Sorrell (32:15) and Nixon (38:41) were at the front in 1996 when 798 runners completed the race.

Gruber said the local and regional businesses and merchants rally around the race and serve as sponsors. Bigger companies such as Coke, Etonic and Reebok also help out.

"We push pretty hard for the local content of it because that's the way Rotary works," Gruber said.

Last year $25,000 worth of college scholarships was given away.

Eighth grade team just nipped in finals

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset eighth grade travelling team had a Cinderella run through the Patriot League playoffs, but the clock finally struck midnight for the squad last Sunday at Cohasset High.

The team reached the championship game, and battled first place Bridgewater into overtime, but lost, 59-54.

"We were losing in the first half by nine, then we came back and took the lead," said coach Edward J. Connolly. "We were disappointed that we didn't win, but we left it all on the court."

The team benefited from playing the championship game at home.

"It was a real good crowd," said Connolly. "We got a lot of hometown support."

It was a tough loss, but the season as a whole was definitely a success.

"They're a good bunch of kids," said Connolly. "They are the comeback kids of Cohasset."

Indeed, Cohasset struggled to just a 2-7 start this year before bouncing back with a strong finish to the regular season. Still, the eighth graders were seeded just sixth out of the eight teams heading into the tournament.

"No one expected anything like this," said Connolly. "We were playing against larger towns like Pembroke, Taunton, Hull, East Bridgewater, Bridgewater and Raynham, and we only started out with two wins, but we came all the way back and almost pulled it off."

They beat the third place team, Raynham, in the quarterfinals, then got a tough win in the semifinals against Pembroke.

"What was nice was that they did it as a team," said Connolly. "There was no one superstar, it was all done as a team. We won about five or six in a row against teams that we had lost to by 20, and someone different helped us win each night at a critical stage of the game."

As the squad heads off to high school, Connolly thinks better things are ahead.

"It should be interesting to see how the kids do," said Connolly. "It looks very good for the future of the (high school) team."

Bob Anton also helped coach the team.

"We had a lot of fun," said Connolly.

Member of the team were Dwane Morris, Sean Connolly, John Andrea, Steven Davis, Reed Smith, Chris Bilodeau, Tim Anton, Michael Dooley, Paul Cotter and Craig Laugelle.

Awards handed out at hockey dinner

The Cohasset Varsity Ice Hockey Team recently held its annual Break-up and Awards Banquet at Kimball's By The Sea. The CHS Hockey Boosters continued the long standing tradition of presenting graduating senior players with engraved watches as a memento of their varsity years on the ice.

Senior co-captains Bill Good and Matt Pilczak were presented their watches by coach Dennis Walsh. Walsh noted that both boys joined the team six years ago as seventh-graders.

Coach Walsh also presented several other awards as part of the events of the evening. Senior Bill Good was presented with the "Norman Delaney Award."

Norman Delaney was the original founder of the Hockey Boosters in the '70s. In Mr. Delaney's honor, his friends established this award, to be presented to a senior player who exemplified leadership and achievement in academics as well as athletics.

Freshman player Greg O'Connell was presented with the "Barney Robinson Award." Barney Robinson played for Cohasset High School in the mid-1960s. This award is the unsung hero award recognizing extraordinary effort and accomplishment on the ice.

Consensus among the banquet attendees was unanimous, that Bill and Greg were well-deserving recipients of these awards! Letter certificates were also presented to all qualifying members of the team.

Coach Walsh and assistant coaches Mike Hubley and Archie Rasmussen were presented with gifts from the team by Bill Good and Matt Pilczak.

Bill and Matt expressed their deep appreciation to the coaches and the team members stating "that the season statistics don't convey how well the team played this season and how close game scores were."

Before the evening ended, Coach Walsh announced the new team leaders for the 2000-2001 season. Elected by the team members to the position of captain was Dan Morse. Dan will be assisted by Ken Portanova and Jim Trahon.

The players, coaches and Hockey Boosters would like to express their sincere thanks to everyone who supported the team this season through donations and attendance at the games. Planning is already underway for the 2000/2001 season!

As for the break line for the divisions, the number is 400 or more boys in the school that team will play in Div. 1. If there are less than 400 boys in a school then that school will play in Div. 2.

The difference in enrollments is very drastic from the top school that plays lacrosse, Lowell, which is just beginning their program, but has 1,200 boys to Cohasset, who is the smallest school enrollment-wise playing the sport and they have just 90 boys in the school.

"The decision to go to two divisions in lacrosse is going in the right direction," said Marshfield coach Robbie Robinson. "It takes away the inequality of the large school versus the small school. The traditional lacrosse schools will still continue to play each other."

Marshfield will compete in Div. 1 for the coming year while some of their rivals in the Pilgrim Conference, Duxbury and Hingham, will compete in Div. 2.

The decision to stay in Div. 2 wasn't one that Todd agonized over. He figures that his program can take a wait and see approach just like the hockey team did at Hingham before making a full commitment to Div. 1.

"I did not think it was a decision," said Todd. "We are going to see how things unfold for us like the hockey team did before they committed to playing in Div. 1. We are 85 kids under the cap right now."

There will also be another title awarded in the spring.

"It is going to open up another championship," said Manzelli. "You can opt to move up if you want to."

Don't figure that Div. 2 will be a weak division. By no means is Div. 2 going to be any better or weaker than Div. 1. The defending state champions, Winchester, will be playing in Div. 2 as will Duxbury. The only school that was below the cap that opted to move up was Concord-Carlisle.

"We are low enough numbers wise, but the competition is still there for us to play in Winchester and Duxbury," said Todd . "We can still go up and play the schools that have been on our schedule like Weymouth, Newton North and Falmouth."

For the small schools like Norwell, Cohasset and Hanover, it gives them an opportunity to grow and compete against schools that are the same size.

Cohasset has qualified for the tournament in the past, but has had to play schools like Weymouth in the tournament and take their lumps.

However, these schools will still have to face some of the Div. 1 teams on their schedule that are in their league.

"It will help our chances more having two divisions," said Norwell coach Jay Williams whose program starting playing varsity in 1996. "The only thing that is awkward is because we will still play teams on our schedule like Barnstable, Falmouth and Marshfield that are Div. 1. It is still a bit of a struggle to keep on the same plane with a Hingham or Duxbury for us."

For Cohasset, it's a numbers issue.

"By the end of last year we had only 14 players on our team," said Cohasset athletic director Clark Chatterton. "If I had played a football schedule like that with those numbers they would have me committed. We played Marshfield with 14 and we got beat up. You would not expect a Curry College football team to play Boston College's football schedule. I'm not complaining, but things are more equitable."

Chatterton feels that his scheduling for his program will be a lot easier even though his school is the smallest.

"One of the problems is the sport is new, " said Chatterton. "A lot of the schools like Hull and West Bridgewater don't have lacrosse. It is easier for the scheduling though having Norwell and Hanover to play."

Hockey plays three divisions, football has six and basketball has four. Will there be another lacrosse division in the future? Manzelli feels that there will be, but that is little ways away.

"Down the road, there could be a third division," Manzelli said. "Not right now, however. For 30 years there had been only one division."

following the 10K course or a shorter route. The popular walk generally attracts about 300 participants. Driving winds and rain, blowing horizontally off the water, limited the die-hard field to just 75.

As difficult as the race can be, it is one of the most picturesque in New England. Starting on scenic Cohasset Common, the course follows Highland Ave. to Elm Street, where it turns sharply onto the tree-lined Atlantic Ave. section, which is punctuated by a winding road with few spectators.

The course opens up onto Jerusalem Ave. where gorgeous homes on the left and the Atlantic Ocean on the right border it. The most picturesque section of the route is also the most challenging with several small inclines and winding roads. On cold days, the wind off the ocean can be bone chilling. Gruber, though, said the adverse conditions don't generally bother seasoned roadrunners.

"Last year, the real die-hard runners didn't mind it that much," he said.

The runners face the toughest hill of the course when they make the hairpin turn from Jerusalem Road onto Forest Ave. near 4 miles. Everybody who runs, feels the steep, 60-yard ascent and are usually working on regaining their form on the mostly downhill section of Forest Ave.

After the long Forest Ave. stretch, the course turns left onto North Main Street and is flat until a small upgrade just before the finish line in front of the town hall.

"We have a lot of fun with it," Gruber said, then added, "I know by the end of the day I'm pooped."

CYBA seeks umpires

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Association is looking for boys and girls 12 and over who would be interested in umpiring baseball and softball games this upcoming spring season. For all of those that are interested, please contact Michele Sacks at 383-0417 by March 31, so you can attend a training session in April.

For all those who umpired last year, it is not necessary to call as you will be receiving a letter in the mail shortly.

Fundraiser regatta set for March 26

The Scituate Frostbite Sailing Association in conjunction with the South Shore Habitat for Humanity will hold a fundraiser regatta. The event will take place Sunday, March 26, from 1-3:30 p.m. in Scituate Harbor. (Please note: This is the rain date for an event which was originally scheduled for March 12).

This year, the sailors will donate all of the racing entry fees to the South Shore Habitat in Scituate. In addition, Habitat for Humanity volunteers will be selling refreshments as well as Habitat merchandise in the Scituate Town Pier parking lot (next to Pier 44 Restaurant) during the racing.

For more information about the regatta or Habitat for Humanity, call 781-843-9080.

CHAMPS

The Cohasset sixth grade girls captured the Old Colony League championship in their first year in the league. The girls ended the season in fourth place. They beat Brdigewater in the quarterfinals and then faced first place, unbeaten Braintree. Cohasset prevailed by two points.
The girls went on to beat Abington for the championship. Pictured in back are Lisa Musto, Aly Belz, Emma Weston, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Kaitlin James, and Vanessa Plante. In front is coach Ed Lappen, Lisa Spirito, Katrina Reardon, Emily Savage, and coach Jeff Grossman. Not shown is Chelsea Grossman and assistant coach Ross Lieb-Lappen. Cohasset has three girls teams in the league: sixth grade, seventh grade and eighth grade.

Edvia Yocum, who works at the community center across from the town common, said the warm weather meant the center's windows were open.

"What a commotion," she said. "The seniors were having their St. Patrick's Day party, other people came out with cameras, there were quite a few people out there."

Jane Hamilton, office manager at Atlantic Valuation Group on Depot Court, said Marty is a familiar figure.

"He's been a favorite of ours for a long time," she said. "He sits in the window across the street. You can't miss him because of his color."

Hamilton said the office tried to think of some way to help.

"We tried to think of something that might lure him down," she said. "So we tried to think of what birds eat and the best we could come up with is an English muffin.

"So we raced over and threw it up in pieces."

Police officer Lisa Matos said the fire truck ladder just scared Marty more.

And that's not all. Between Marty and the ladder stood a growling squirrel, which was likely protecting its nest in the fork of the tree and wasn't amused by the entire goings on.

"It was a scene right out of 'Christmas Vacation,'" Matos said. "The squirrel was a bit of a problem."

Animal control officer Paul Murphy was also on the scene but had nothing that could reach that high. So someone radioed the DPW.

Luckily an Asplundh bucket truck that was doing tree work in town for Eastern Edison was only five minutes away and came right over.

The tree workers, who initially started the chipper thinking there was a problem with a tree limb, strapped Adams into the bucket and raised it up to where Marty was perched.

"As soon as I got close, he came right over to me," Adams said.

The entire ordeal took nearly two hours. Folks were hanging out windows in the houses around the common, people in cars stopped and got out, and bystanders came with crackers. At one point, it seemed as though the whole town had come to take a look.

"It was a day to remember," said Murphy, the animal control officer. "When the owner was up in the bucket truck he put his arm out and the bird walked right down the guy's arm."

Murphy said clipped wings can give a pet owner a false sense of security.

"Under certain conditions birds can get caught in an up draft," he said. "This couldn't have happened in a more prominent location. The whole scenario was really priceless and luckily it had a happy ending."

Firefighters put up a ladder to try and get Marty (on the branch) to come down. A bucket truck from Asplundh finally did the trick.

Adams, who runs a handyman business, said he bought Marty from a breeder when the exotic bird was just six weeks old. Macaws can live to upwards of 80 years old and cost from $1800 to $2500.

Adams, who describes Marty as being very affectionate, has owned parakeets and conures before but nothing as big as a macaw.

He's taken Marty on outings to the Community Center Nursery School, the Montessori school in Scituate and to kids night at the library.

"Most kids in town know him," said Adams, who sits with Marty on the common in the warmer months.

Adams, who said he planned to clip Marty's wings a little shorter, said he loves animals of all kinds.

"I like birds, I like all animals and I watch people's dogs around town," he said. In fact, Adams would have had a dog instead but his landlord doesn't allow dogs.

So he bought Marty and hasn't looked back.

"I hand fed him when he was six weeks old, so he thinks I'm his parent," said Adams, who is teaching Marty to say, "hello," "step up," and "Republican" in honor of Adams' membership on the Republican town committee.

A little about macaws

The blue and gold macaw can measure up to 33 inches long and originates from Central to South America. They have friendly personalities, are good talkers and enjoy lots of interaction.

There are 30 species of macaws and despite their large size and powerful beaks, they are docile and friendly when hand-raised from babies.

The proposed layover station will be built on either the north or south side of the Driftway. Scituate selectmen say both sites are unacceptable for environmental reasons.

Scituate selectmen sent a letter two weeks ago to their counterparts in Hingham and Cohasset suggesting a joint meeting to discuss and compose a letter to the state auditor's office requesting that they undertake an independent study to review the rising cost of the Greenbush project.

The meeting, which is open to the public, is slated for 7:30 p.m. tonight at the Scituate Public Library on Branch Street.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he "RSVP'ed" to Scituate and told them that Cohasset selectmen would be represented.

Selectman Merle Brown said he'd be there.

"I'm going to holler at them there," he said.

Annual town meeting may be a turning point

year, when all renovations are scheduled to be completed. According to the timetable set forth by architect Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky and Hoit, the projects could be put out to bid this fall, with construction at both schools to begin in March 2001. Renovations at Deer Hill are expected to last 18 months, with the more involved middle-high school project to last 3-1/2 years.

Because it is a borrowing article, passage of the renovation project will require a two-thirds majority at town meeting and the approval of a majority of voters for a Proposition 2 1/2 debt-exclusion override at the April 8 Town Election.

The town has been approved for 60 percent reimbursement of the principal and interest of the project by the Mass. School Building Assistance Board. Should the project be approved, Haddad said he expects the state reimbursement to begin within four years.

Over the next four years, Haddad and Town Accountant Mike Buckley plan to fund the construction phase of the project through bonds, but will not permanently borrow the funds until state reimbursement begins.

Haddad said taxpayers would be responsible for the interest on the bonds from FY 2002 to FY 2004 and would begin paying back the renovation project itself in FY 2004. The costs of those renovations would be spread out over 20 years, meaning Cohasset taxpayers would actually pay for the project over 22 years, from FY 2002 to FY 2024.

Should the renovation project pass at town meeting and an override election, Buckley has estimated the average taxpayer in Cohasset, with a home valued at $358,500, can expect to pay a total of $10,291 over the 22-year period. The average cost per year would be approximately $468, with a cost per month of $39.

Voters will also have the opportunity to choose an $800,000 capital-exclusion override to perform an initial phase of maintenance at Deer Hill and the middle-high school. The citizen's petition article would require a special election to approve the override of Proposition 2 1/2.

The capital-exclusion override would be a one-time increase on the town's tax rate as opposed to a debt-exclusion override, which may be spread over a number of years.

Town library

In addition to deciding upon the future course of two of its town's schools, voters will also determine whether the former Osgood school is to become the new town library.

Plans for the new library include a rotunda with a built-in skylight near the lobby and a restored cupola. A large reading room, children's room with low bookstacks, and built-in wiring are also features of the proposed library.

Approving the use of Osgood as a library would also determine the future of another town building, as the $2.9 million project is contingent upon town meeting agreeing to sell the current Paul Pratt library as part of the financing plan. Library trustees developed the plan in conjunction with Haddad as a way to build the new library without increasing the tax rate.

The financing plan involves an expected library construction grant of $1.45 million from the Mass. Board of Library Commissioners, which would fund half of the cost of an Osgood library. The bulk of the remaining $1.45 million would be financed through private donations and the sale of the Pratt library, appraised at $700,000 in 1998.

A total of $200,000 is expected to remain after private donations are made and the Pratt library is sold. Haddad said the $200,000 amount could replace existing long-term debt and be paid back over 20 years.

Pay as You Throw

The future of the town's trash disposal will also be determined at town meeting, as voters decide to accept or reject a citizen's petition article which would authorize selectmen to institute a Pay-As-You-Throw [PAYT] program.

According to selectman and recycling committee member Merle Brown, the town would offer two types of bags with PAYT, a 30-gallon bag for $1, and a 15-gallon bag for 50 cents. The smaller bags would allow those generating less trash to avoid having to hold onto larger bags until they fill up.

While not as crucial to the day-to-day operations of the town, an article likely to generate strong opinions is a proposed underage smoking bylaw, which would fine those under 18 for buying or using cigarettes or other forms of tobacco. Parents would be liable for the fines, which range from $50 for the first offense, $100 for the second offense, and $200 for any third or subsequent offense.

Haddad said he has been assured such a bylaw would be legal by the Mass. Attorney General's Office.

Other issues to be decided:

A proposed zoning article which would re-zone the area where Cohasset Heights Landfill is located. The citizen's petition article would change the light technology zone, where CHL is located, to a technology business district. Landfills would be prohibited in the district.

A proposed article to increase the highway business district by 200 feet along Route 3A to allow for the expansion of Stop & Shop Plaza. Selectmen have endorsed the article, noting the need for a greater residential tax base. The planning board is opposed, as it was last year when the article was proposed. Without the planning board's recommendation, the zoning article cannot appear on the warrant.

A $1.5 million request from the board of water commissioners to fund a variety of projects, including repairing water mains and pipes, making improvements to the Lily Pond treatment plant, conducting water quality monitoring, and restoring the Sohier Street and Elm Meadow wellfields to active service.

A $20,000 article to fund a feasibility study for a planned sewer project in the Little Harbor Watershed. The sewer system is to be funded by area residents, but would be taken over by the town once it is completed. The town would then charge user fees to residents as is done in other parts of town.

A request from Mendel Road residents to be connected to the town sewer mains once the Central Sewer District comes on-line and before the connection of vacant lots in the district.

New tax bill offers rebates to senior citizens is $40,000 for a single individual who is not the head of a household, $50,000 for the head of a household, and $60,000 for a husband and wife filing a joint tax return.

• The assessed valuation of the person's primary residence cannot exceed $400,000.

The legislation states that eligible applicants will receive a rebate if their combined real estate, tax, and water and sewer bills exceed 10 percent of their annual income. The rebate will be equal to the amount senior citizens pay beyond the 10 percent threshold, up to the maximum rebate amount. The credit will be phased in over two years. In the first year, the maximum credit will be $350. The maximum credit will increase to $750 in the second year. For example, a couple with a combined annual income of $40,000 would be eligible for a rebate if their tax, sewer and water bills exceed $4,000. If the couple pays $4,250 in taxes and water and sewer bills, they will receive a $250 rebate.

Senior citizens who rent are also eligible for a rebate. The state assumes that 25 percent of the rent paid by a renter is for property taxes, and water and sewer bills. Seniors who rent can receive a rebate if 25 percent of their rent exceeds10 percent of their annual income. For example, senior citizens with annual incomes of $15,000 would receive a rebate if they paid more than 10 percent of their income, or a threshold of $1,500, toward the owner's property taxes and water and sewer bills. Senior citizens with a $15,000 income who pay $600 per month for rent would be eligible for a rebate. The reason is that of the $600 for rent, 25 percent pays for the owner's taxes and utility costs. A rent of $600 per month multiplied by 12 months equals $7,200 per year for rent. Twenty-five percent of $7,200 means that $1,800 of the rent pays for the owner's utilities and taxes. A senior citizen with a $15,000 annual income is expected to pay only $1,500 of their rent for taxes and utilities, and they would receive a $300 rebate (25 percent of their rent, which is $1,800, minus the $1,500 threshold, which equals $300).

Hedlund said the formula for calculating the rebate is a little complicated. To explain the requirements, the Council on Aging has scheduled a forum for May 17.

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggested examples be shown to seniors at town meeting of what the rebate could mean for them.

"Sample calculations at town meeting would be very helpful for seniors to understand how this could impact them," Sullivan said.

Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler said senior citizens need to understand that they cannot receive a rebate under the Circuit Breaker Bill unless they file an income tax return.

"It's very important for senior citizens to understand the tax return component, because they cannot receive a rebate without it," Pooler said. "They should also understand that this does not negate any other rebates or deferrals offered by the town.

Currently, Cohasset offers a $175 tax rebate to all senior citizens 70 or older with an income that does not exceed $40,000 per year. The rebate is actually a little higher, because each year the selectmen have the option of increasing the rebate for one year. Currently, eligible residents receive a $262.50 rebate. The town also offers a property tax deferral for senior citizens. Seniors can defer all or part of their property taxes for an indefinite period. The bill is due when the title is transferred at a sale or inheritance.

"We have about a dozen seniors in the deferral program," Pooler said. "Many don't take advantage of the program because it places a lien on the house, and they want to leave the home to their children without any outstanding bills to be paid."

Council on Aging Director Kathy Bryanton said these exemptions are important because 23 percent of Cohasset's population is older than 60, yet there are only 65 affordable housing units. Bryanton said the 1990 census revealed that 43 percent of Cohasset's senior citizens are in the low to middle income bracket.

"There is a real need for this kind of support for our senior citizens in Cohasset," Bryanton said. "Many people who can no longer afford to live in Cohasset move out. We are looking at other options as well. One is to support the use of in-law apartments because we have a lot of old two-story homes in town. The problem is obtaining the money to renovate and convert the homes."

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

MIXED FEELINGS
Perhaps one of the newest trends in kitchen design is a reaction to our fast-paced lives. It seems that the faster we go, the more laid-back we want our kitchens to be. Thus, the new "unfitted" look has emerged to place high priority on calmness, comfort, and individuality. The look is characterized by an unstructured mix of cabinetry that shares a stylistic element. In many cases, stand-alone pieces will be mixed in with continuous runs of cabinets to create task-specific work areas. The unfitted kitchen is often accented by fine collectibles, heirlooms, and even family photographs, all of which contribute to its relaxed style. The idea is to create a functional kitchen that has the feel of home.
The kitchen has become the most important room in the home. It's a place to cook, eat, entertain, and pay the bills. Are you satisfied with the look and feel of your kitchen? The Designing Woman can take the mystery out of creating beautiful and functional living spaces. We coordinate the selection of materials and supervise craftsmen to ensure each phase of the project meets your expectations. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.
HINT: The unfitted kitchen also features a mix of countertop materials and work heights.

POLICE NOTES

Footsteps in snow lead to arrest

Cohasset police officer Garrett Hunt arrested an East Bridgewater man in the early hours of Saturday morning after following his footsteps in the snow subsequent to an alleged break-in at Village Wine & Spirits on South Main Street.

Police charged Shawn Patrick Connolly, 31, of 45 Winter St. in East Bridgewater with breaking & entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony; malicious destruction of property over $250; larceny in a building and wanton destruction of property valued at $250 or less.

Hunt, officer William Quigley and Sgt. David Cogill responded to reports of a possible B&E at the liquor store at 1:42 a.m.

Police said it appeared that a flowerpot had been hurled through the plate glass window. The owner determined that a bottle of champagne was stolen.

Hunt followed footsteps in the snow that led about 15 yards to the suspect who was crouched under a wooden deck and who appeared to be intoxicated.

In the lockup the suspect allegedly tore up a police department blanket and stuffed it in the toilet, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Connolly was arraigned on the charges Monday.

Pickup truck hits utility pole

During Friday's snowstorm, the driver of a Dodge pickup truck lost control and hit a pole at 268 Beechwood St. near the King Street intersection.

The incident occurred at about 2:36 p.m., Police Chief Brian Noonan said. Later that afternoon Edison had to shut power off to the surrounding neighborhood while the pole was replaced and the wires were switched over. Police also shut the street off to traffic for a period of time.

The driver had no visible injuries and was not cited in the incident, police said.

Oratorical festival held at Greek church

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church of Cohasset recently held the St. John Chrysostom Oratorical Festival, which is sponsored by the Department of Religious Education of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America.

The Oratorical Festival is a program that invites youth in middle and senior high school to speak about their faith; their church and their heritage. A list of topics is given to the participants of which they may choose one to deliver a 3-5 minute speech and present it to the congregation. The event is judged by a panel of qualified judges in communication skills.

The top speakers in the Junior (grade 7-9) and Senior (grade 10-12) Divisions of the Parish Oratorical Festival will proceed to the District Level which encompasses several other churches from this geographic area. Scholarship money was also awarded.

The top speaker for the Senior Division (grades 10-12) was Leah Contrino, age 15, daughter of Larry and Gini Contrino of Braintree. Leah attends 10th grade at Braintree High School and received a $500 scholarship. Her topic was: "Most non-Orthodox Christians have 'modernized' their doctrines, worship services and even the Bible. I believe it is important to remain true to the traditions of the early church because . . ."

Each of the top speakers for the Junior Division (grades 7-9) had chosen the topic "All the Sacraments were instituted by Christ for the salvation of the believer. Select one of the Sacraments and talk about how the grace of God is transmitted." First place speaker, Petrina Pappas, age 15, daughter of James and Marion Pappas of Marshfield, spoke regarding the Sacrament of Confession. Petrina attends ninth grade at Marshfield High School and also received a $500 scholarship. Choosing the Sacrament of Baptism, second place speaker, Irene Botsolis, age 12, daughter of James and Jordana Botsolis of Braintree, attends seventh grade at South Middle School. She received a $200 scholarship. Receiving a $100 scholarship, third place speaker, Christina Rumble, age 13, daughter of Charles and Donna Rumble, spoke about the Sacrament of Holy Communion. Christina attends seventh grade at Abigail Adams Intermediate School.

Other local participants receiving Honorable Mention Awards: Dianna Drake, age 13, daughter of Keith and Vivian Drake of Braintree; Kaitlin Morris, age 14, daughter of Roger and Kathy Morris of Abington; Matthew Morris, age 14, son of Roger and Kathy Morris of Abington; Anthony Pappas, age 14, son of James and Marion Pappas of Marshfield; Christos Theodorou, age 12, son of Nick and Susan Theodorou of Hanover and Jeni Theodorou, age 13, daughter of Nick and Susan Theodorou of Hanover.

St. Anthony's celebrates St. Patrick's Day in style

Kitchen help at the St. Patrick's Day dinner included Susan O'Connell, Paul Guinee (chairman) and Bill Flynn.

St. Anthony's Parish Center was bursting at the seams Saturday evening, March 19, when a corned beef and cabbage dinner was planned and cooked by Paul Guinee and his committee. Three families headed up the sales and service, the Trahons, the Lynners, and the Whoriskeys. Each member had a task—the men cooked; the mothers arranged the ticket sales and supervised; and the men who were not in the kitchen served the "Pub," all the children either set up or served tables and/or decorated.

Entertainment of Irish song was lead by Megan Devine. Aisling Guinee and Molly Gallagher performed an Irish step dance. They are students at Raquelle's Dance Studio in Cohasset. Added to the fun was a quick Irish step dance by Nancy Roach, secretary for the parish and a solo by Father Mulvehill. Among the many students who helped were Sarah Brady, Cosmo Canby, Mark Chapman, Holly Dinsmore, Jack Jerz, Kelly Hawley, Greg and Matt O'Brien, Shanna Sullivan and Heather Pevarno, Eric Libbey and Jodi Roach.

Behind the scenes doing yeoman work in the kitchen were Anna Abruzzese, Sarah Murphy and Susan O'Connell, Bill Ross and Bill Flynn. A booklet of all the traditional songs and some that were not so familiar was available so everyone could join in the singing as they enjoyed dessert and Irish coffee.

The apostles dance during the spirited musical production of "Jesus Christ Superstar." The Andrew Lloyd Weber hit is celebrating its 30th anniversary and the Norwell theater is the only place around to catch the show.

Rock opera celebrates 30th anniversary at Company Theatre

Norwell's Company Theatre will celebrate it's 20th anniversary this spring with a production of biblical proportions — literally.

The local theatre will present 16 performances of Andrew Lloyd Weber's legendary rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar" from March 31 until April 22. Like the theater, "Jesus Christ Superstar" is also celebrating an anniversary — it's 30th, and according to Company Theatre publicity director Steve White, this is the only production of the show folks will be able to see locally this year.

"It's the 30th anniversary of the show," White said, "and Weber just released a new Broadway tour of the show."

But none of the actual Broadway show's tour dates include the New England area.

"It's just such a popular show. Intellectually, it's really exciting, and the show also asks a lot of good questions. And the music is just amazing."
COMPANY THEATRE CO-FOUNDER AND DIRECTOR ZOE BRADFORD

"We're the only theater company doing the show in New England," White said. "You can't see 'Superstar' anywhere else but here in the year 2000."

Getting the rights to put on the show was a tough battle, said White, because officials representing Weber's production were not willing at first to sell to the Company Theatre.

White said the in-house director and co-founder of The Company Theatre, Zoe Bradford struggled to get and perform the show.

"She pleaded with [Weber's people] to let her do the show," White said. "Usually when those people say no, they mean no."

But Bradford was determined and for good reason.

"This happens to be my favorite show," She said. "I love it, and we really wanted to be able to present it, but I couldn't get the rights to the show because it was already known that the show would be opening up on Broadway."

Bradford said rights to given shows are difficult to obtain when the original production of a given show opens.

"I wrote the people in charge a letter, and told them how important it

Paying homage to Aerosmith

Local tribute band celebrates 10th anniversary

They sound like them. Some of them even look like them. The six-member band of Draw the Line are all about Aerosmith. The South Shore-based tribute band will celebrate a decade of imitating Aerosmith this June. In addition to their many fans, Draw the Line has even earned the respect of the band they pay homage to in performance after performance. Earlier this month, Aerosmith's Steven Tyler turned up at a Draw the Line concert at Weymouth's Alternate Route to show his support for the band.

"We weren't expecting him to come down," said Draw The Line vocalist Neill Byrnes — a friend of Tyler's. Byrnes also happens to look a lot like the legendary Aerosmith personality.

"We like to play the songs that people are familiar with. And I think we're lucky that Aerosmith is just an incredibly popular band. That helps."
DRAW THE LINE VOCALIST NEILL BYRNES

Byrnes said during the show at The Alternate Route, one of his friends told him that he had spotted Tyler at a nearby CVS, and had told him about the concert.

"Two minutes after he told me that," Byrnes said, "(Tyler) walked through the door."

Byrnes said he met Tyler about 10 years ago during a "Steve Tyler look alike contest." Since then, Byrnes has had the opportunity to watch Aerosmith shows from backstage, and do various MTV promotions with Draw The Line.

"(Tyler) has always noticed our band," Byrnes said. "He lives around here so it would be hard for him not to notice it."

Byrnes' fellow band members are Steve Doran (drums), Ed McMennimon (guitar), Joe Carchedi (lead guitar), John Lammi (bass was to me to be able to do this show, and eventually, they said yes. We're one of the few groups they've given that allowance."

Bradford said the show, set to Weber's wonderful musical score tells the story of Jesus' last few days on earth, picking up before the Last Supper, portraying Judas' betrayal, and depicting the events of the crucifixion of Christ.

Both White and Bradford agree that the music makes the show.

"The songs in the show are so identifiable," White said. "It's just a lot of fun. It's also a rocking show. Before this production was released 30 years ago, theater was just kind of laid back."

The show's been a big hit for the Company Theatre, which sold out all 16 performances of its last production of "Jesus Christ Superstar," staged in 1996.

"It's just such a popular show," Bradford added. "Intellectually, it's really exciting, and the show also asks a lot of good questions. And the music is just amazing."

Choreography is key in the Company Theatre production.

The Company Theatre's music and art director Michael Joseph, said he is also a big fan of the show's sound.

"It's got a lot of that '70s groove going on," he said. "It's really dramatic music that kind of underlies what's going on."

Joseph said there are 13 different instruments in the orchestra for "Jesus Christ Superstar."

"The show's music was written for a pretty large force," he added.

Company Theatre celebrates two decades on stage

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Although The Company Theatre's employees are working hard to focus on the current production of "Jesus Christ Superstar," they're proud of the many hit shows they've put on in the last 20 years. Highlights include: "Dracula," "Auntie Mame," "A Christmas Carol," "Peter Pan," "The Wizard of Oz," "Godspell," "Little Shop of Horrors," "Grease," Stephen King's "Misery," and "Tommy."

Founded in Weymouth in1979 by Bradford and her friend Jordie Saucerman, the Company Theatre has grown in leaps and bounds.

"We started very small," Bradford noted. "But now we've certainly grown."

Bradford said Joseph joined The Company Theatre in 1983, and in 1993, Bradford said the three were finally able to acquire the Accord Park Drive building that they now call home.

Since its inception, The Company Theatre has typically put on five performances a year, and has also offered a concert series.

In addition, The Company Theatre offers apprenticeship programs, an acting school for children, and puts on all of its productions with volunteers.

Bradford said The Company Theatre is a non-profit organization.

"I love being in this business because everything is really a team effort," Bradford added. "We hold a lot of meetings to discuss what we envision. You have to be patient."

"Overall, I think it's the energy of the cast," she said. "An audience can sit through almost anything as long as the cast has a certain level of energy. And you need visuals. If you don't have much to look at, generally, you'll go away disappointed."
COMPANY THEATRE CO-FOUNDER ZOE BRADFORD

Bradford said one of the only downsides of her job is casting day because some people always have to be turned away from the parts they audition for.

However, one of the other enjoyable aspects of Bradford's job is her opportunity to be creative. Bradford said she even had the chance to write an original play called "Glory Land" a few years ago.

Bradford said her production of the original show won the Moss-Hart Award for best original production in New England.

Bradford said "Glory Land" focuses on the character of Norman Rockwell and features original music by Joseph, but also features the music of bands like The Rolling Stones.

When it comes to what makes a good performance, Bradford seems to know all the factors.

"Overall, I think it's the energy of the cast," she said. "An audience can sit through almost anything as long as the cast has a certain level of energy. And you need visuals. If you don't have much to look at, generally, you'll go away disappointed."

Bradford said audience members for "Jesus Christ Superstar" won't walk away disappointed.

"We have such a diverse cast made up of people that would typically be lead material," she said. "There's a lot of talent and background involved. 'Superstar' also has a lot of really cool effects, and of course, the music is a lot of fun."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22

A Libra moon becomes inactive at 5:26 a.m. until 6:17 a.m., when a Scorpio moon takes over. Prepare for a challenging two-day period. The focus remains on partners and relationship matters. If you've been experiencing problems with another, it's time to clear the air. Be more forgiving and let go of past hurts, resentments. You can add new depth and dimension to key relationships. Finish old business rather than starting new activities. Through prayer and meditation you can gain deep penetrating insights and find new meanings in life.

THURSDAY, MARCH 23

Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon opposes Saturn at 9:46 a.m. Breakdowns, delays, reversals are likely. Allow extra time. Venus forms a 90-degree alignment to Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio. Don't get caught up in negative behavior and bad habits, like nursing old grudges, feeling resentful, fearful. This is a time when you can get to the bottom of things and gain new awareness that will help you to make significant changes in your personal life. At 6:53 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive.

FRIDAY, MARCH 24

This may be a slow-starting morning. The Scorpio moon is inactive until 3:43 p.m. Plan to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. Storm clouds move out at 3:43 p.m., when the moon enters optimistic Sagittarius. The green light goes on for new starts of all kinds at this time. The remainder of the day is prime for launching ventures, making important decisions, signing contracts and making purchases. Go for the gold.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25

Harmonious alignments of Venus/Saturn and Mercury/Jupiter set the stage for an upbeat weekend. In addition, the moon travels in cheerful Sagittarius. It is best to launch new activities and sign contracts before 11:34 a.m., when Mercury forms a 60-degree contact to expansive Jupiter. There is one rough spot in effect between 3:16 and 6:16 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. Don't do or say anything you will later regret. The remainder of the evening rates high for fun and games. Let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, MARCH 26

Fair and sunny astrological weather continues. The upbeat Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus at 6:26 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. No major planetary activity occurs. That means that this day is prime for vacationing. Kick back, relax and enjoy good friends, conversation, pastimes.

MONDAY, MARCH 27

This is a day to get things done. Roll up your sleeves and tackle a full agenda. Hard work will pay off. The moon enters business-oriented Capricorn at 3:51 a.m. and forms a harmonious contact to ambitious Mars at 10:41 a.m. The green light is on for new starts, particularly regarding employment or career matters. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:21 p.m. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Mercury prompt you to stay busy with practical projects this evening.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28

High productivity potential continues. It is best to start new activities before 10:33 a.m., when the Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to its ruler, Saturn. Zero in on duties, responsibilities, commitments you have made. Now is the time to follow through. At 6:43 p.m. the moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29

This is a day to finish projects already begun: review, redo and repair, tie up loose ends. The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn. However, it is inactive until 4:34 p.m. That means that new starts are off limits. An applying alignment of Mercury and Pluto warns against signing contracts or making important decisions. The moon enters Aquarius at 4:34 p.m.

Pan-Fried Steak

Pan-fried steak is really nothing more than steak sautéed over high heat in a skillet. The recipe calls for a mere tablespoon of oil so the final result is neither greasy nor heart-clogging. In fact, pan–frying is a great alternative to grilling and many folks, myself included, think that this method produces a superior crust – deep brown, crusty, and richly flavored.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Although this is one of the simplest recipes in terms of ingredients and preparation, each component – the steak, the pan, and the timing – is essential to success. I started by purchasing 11 cuts of steak to determine which were best suited for the pan method. All steaks were cooked to an internal temperature of 130 degrees (I used an instant-read thermometer to judge temperature) in a preheated cast-iron pan.

My first discovery was that the Cadillac grilling steaks – porterhouse, T-bone, and bone-in ribeye – were difficult to handle since the bones promoted uneven cooking. (The meat farthest from the bones was well-cooked by the time the meat close to the bones was medium-rare.) Here are the results with the other eight steaks:

- London Broil or Flank Steak ($3.99/lb): Stringy, tough; good flavor.
- Top Blade ($2.99/lb): Dry, tough; decent flavor.
- Shell Sirloin ($3.49/lb): Chewy, dry with a dull, meaty flavor.
- Top Sirloin ($2.49): Tough, dry; tastes like meaty dog food.
- Sirloin Tip ($4.99/lb): Stringy, not too dry; decent steak flavor.
- Sirloin Strip ($8.99/lb): Good but not great texture with nice steak flavor.
- Rib Eye or Delmonico ($9.99/lb): Juicy, tender; great steak flavor.
- Tenderloin ($12.99/lb): Tender and moist; little flavor.

I also tested two different grades of beef: Choice and Select. (Prime is the best cut but is virtually impossible to find at retail since it is usually reserved for restaurants.) Choice meat is about one dollar more per pound than Select and, as I discovered, is more than worth the price. For example, I purchased rib-eye steaks graded both Choice and Select. First off, the Choice appeared more marbled than the Select. This difference resulted in a juicier, tenderer, and better flavored steak. Worst of all, the Select steak had that unpleasant liver flavor that I associate with dog food. When it comes to steaks, avoid Select meat at all costs.

To test the recipe itself, I chose my favorite cut, the boneless rib-eye. I used steaks that were 1 inch thick (the most common thickness found in the supermarket). I started by testing three types of skillets: cast-iron, aluminum, and nonstick. I heated each of the skillets on medium high for 5 minutes. (Heating the skillet is very important. If the pan is not fully heated it is impossible to time the steaks and they don't brown evenly.)

Meanwhile I generously salted and peppered the steaks. Next, I added one tablespoon of oil to the pan. I sautéed the steaks on the first side for 3 minutes and then flipped them, cooking for an additional 6 minutes for medium-rare. The steak prepared in the cast-iron skillet was nicely crusted and browned. The aluminum core skillet produced an acceptable steak if a bit spotty on the outside. The nonstick skillet steak was much less attractive, with patches of gray and a surface that was actually wet in spots. Cast iron was the hands-down winner.

In terms of temperature, a very high setting actually browned or crusted the steaks too much by the time the interior was cooked to medium rare. Cooking at a lower temperature produced the opposite result: the exterior was gray and wet at worst and not well browned at best. Finally, I tried lowering the temperature after the initial browning of both sides. This was also disappointing; a constant medium-high heat was best. As for cooking time, I discovered that nine minutes was just right for a medium-rare steak, eight minutes for rare, and 10 minutes turned out a medium steak. Four minutes of sautéing before turning made the most evenly colored steaks. When using a large, heavy-duty pan, two or three small rib-eyes can be done at the same time, although lesser pans are not up to the task.

As for the oil, olive oil was my favorite. Vegetable and canola oils worked but were flat tasting compared to the olive oil. (Butter would burn.) I also tried comparing steaks that were seasoned before being tossed into the skillet to steaks that were seasoned after they were cooked. The pre-seasoned steaks had more flavor – the salt and pepper had melded better with the meat. I also wanted to test resting the steaks for a few minutes. Five minutes was best, the extra time allowing the meat to even out in color, texture, and juiciness. Longer resting periods allowed the meat to cool too much.

You will find that this can be a messy recipe. A splatter screen and continuous use of the ventilation system helps to minimize this problem. For a quick serving suggestion, mix 3 tablespoons crumbled Stilton with 1 tablespoon butter along with a pinch of salt and pepper. Place one tablespoon of the mixture on top of each steak before serving. Of course, the steak can be sliced and served with a simple salad and a glass of wine for a quick midweek dinner.

PAN-FRIED STEAK This recipe serves two and should be made in a 10-inch cast-iron pan. Do not attempt this recipe in a nonstick skillet, which will produce an anemic-looking steak. Second choice would be a very heavy skillet with an aluminum core.

(2) boneless rib-eye (Delmonico), or sirloin strip steaks cut to 1-inch thickness, about 1/2 to 3/4 pound each
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon olive oil

1. Heat a heavy-duty 10-inch (or larger) skillet (cast iron preferred; do not use nonstick) over medium-high heat for 5 minutes. Generously season the steaks with salt and pepper.
2. Add olive oil to pan and swirl to coat the bottom. Add the steaks and cook without moving for 4 minutes. Turn the steaks and cook for 4 minutes more for rare, 5 minutes more for medium rare, and 6 minutes more for medium. Remove from the pan and let rest for 5 minutes before serving.

Creating outdoor rooms

Landscaping basics

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

This week's calendar may indicate the official arrival of spring, but our weather continues to follow a roller-coaster pattern, typical of the month of March in New England. Hints of spring and summer alternate with chilly blasts and snowy interludes, reminders of a winter season reluctant to release its grip. Through the snow white blanket, colorful drifts of purple and gold crocuses and the sunny yellow blooms of early daffodils glow in the afternoon sunlight as the warm rays gradually melt the lingering patches of snowcover. The leaf and flower buds of many trees and shrubs are beginning to swell as the days grow longer and nature prepares to burst forth with the glorious blooms of spring.

With the coming of spring, there is an irresistible urge to greet the new season with a new look: a new spring wardrobe, new furniture, or the renovation of our home or outdoor living spaces. The rebirth of our landscapes rekindles the spirit and awakens our creative energies. For some, a thorough spring cleaning of home and garden satisfies the primal nesting instinct, but many gardeners feel an overwhelming need to prepare new gardens, purchase and plant new trees and shrubs or renovate an overgrown landscape.

A stroll through the yard with pad and pencil in hand is usually a wise first step approach to the new gardening season. Try to step back and critically evaluate your property as if you had never seen it before. A well-designed property should be both functional and aesthetically pleasing. If you are preparing a master plan, you may find it helpful to think of the landscape as outdoor rooms. Your objective should be to have "form follow function" out-of-doors just as the interior spaces in your home are designated to serve specific purposes. In the landscape, the sky and the mature tree canopy form the roof, shrubs serve as the walls, and ground covers and grass function as the floor. Some of these elements may already exist while others will need to be added.

Without a base plan or design, there is a tendency to randomly plant trees and shrubs or install permanent structures. When the plants mature or the needs of the family change, these impulsive additions may eventually interfere with the flow of everyday activities.

This approach can be both costly and wasteful. Advance planning will maximize your investment of time, money and energy.

After your initial evaluation, decide which existing elements are to remain and those which may need to be altered, transplanted, or eliminated entirely. As you develop your outdoor rooms, consider which materials will best suit your plan for each of the rooms you hope to establish, recognizing your home as a central feature of the plan which will provide some of the walls of your outdoor living spaces.

The ground plane usually requires multiple types of surfaces depending upon the function of each space. Your choice of materials to cover your floors should be directly related to the degree of foot traffic anticipated in a given space and your willingness and ability to maintain the underlying surfacing material in terms of time and expense. In areas where heavy traffic is likely, hardscape may be the best solution. The installation of concrete, brick, bluestone or similar solid materials tend to be preferred for terraces or walkways, especially those which lead to a primary entrance. In areas of lighter traffic, grassy paths, stepping stones or gravel may serve as suitable alternatives to the more expensive paving materials. Bark mulch and low-maintenance ground covers such as pachysandra, ivy or vinca may be useful options, particularly in shady locales. Lawns, despite their high maintenance requirements, remain the most popular choice for the majority of homeowners. Gardens, depending on their size, form and location, may also serve as part of the ground plane.

Multi-roomed landscapes may require the installation of side planes to establish enclosures. Plantings of trees, shrubs, hedges or perennial borders can be used to provide living walls which may function to reduce noise, restrict movement or screen unwanted views. Fences or walls made from construction materials offer an alternative means of delineating these spaces and can be used to separate the public access areas from private family spaces.

Finally, your need for an overhead roof plane will be determined by your desire to provide protection from the elements. Existing trees may help to filter sunlight and reduce exposure to wind or new plantings can be installed to shade a porch, patio or deck from the direct rays of the hot afternoon sun. Gazebos, arbors and pergolas can be erected to create an attractive, alternative roof plane and subsequently planted with shrubs and vines to soften these architectural features and eventually produce a denser, overhead canopy.

The use of living plant material as the floors, walls and roof of your outdoor living space may take several years to reach their desired effect, but the long term gains from a thoughtfully planned landscape will be worth the wait.

From Art Nouveau to Shabby Chic on Antique Row

By Paula Woodhull
STAFF WRITER

Antique Row on Scituate Harbor's Front Street has something for everyone.

Whether you're looking for the latest in decorating trends, or more traditional furnishings and accessories for the home, the harbor area, with its quaint shops, beckons and beguiles.

During the summer months, the harbor is crowded with onlookers and summer people out for a day of shopping and browsing. With its great waterfront location, Antique Row bustles throughout the year.

"Basically I carry a lot of Victorian, of the early and late period," says Barbara Landry, owner of Needful Things on Front Street.

Art Nouveau objects from the period 1900-30, with a highly nostalgic but elegant look, are very popular right now. Vases and glassware from this period, which roughly coincides with the Edwardian era, are romantic and graceful.

Pieces from the 1930-45 Art Deco period are also in high demand in antique and collectible shops. Art Deco clocks, lamps and statues, highly stylized in their design, such as iridescent amber, appeal to everyone, according to Landry.

"These are the things I keep replacing," she notes.

Somewhat surprisingly, the stiff, formal Victorian look has made a comeback. Decorating and collecting trends change from moment to moment but there does seem to be a renewed interest in all things Victorian in the last several months.

People are looking for "settees, small sofas with high backs, wonderfully carved cabinets, mirrors and lithographs," says Landry.

"I've sent a complete Victorian parlor set to Indiana." Some valuable and rare 17th and 18th century pieces do not find their way into her shop but customers know when something desirable and sought after becomes available.

More and more people who are in the antique business are selling online, Landry among them. This is a good way to reach customers who know exactly what they are looking for.

"You're touching a global audience online. They may have more appreciation for a piece because they're looking for that specific item."

For other decorating tastes, country (particularly French Provence and English country), and what has become known as "shabby chic," is still all the rage. Authentic antiques are used to accessorize the main motif of a room that's done in shabby chic.

That's the case down the street at two other shops, Gatherings, and Wisteria, where the look is distinctly more impromptu.

"We're very eclectic," says owner Marsha McNeice. While the shabby chic look is not quite as popular as it was a year of so ago, customers are searching for pieces for their homes that are light, bright and lend an airy, open look to a room. Some of these furniture pieces are antiques but most are of more recent vintage.

The shop does room settings for customers who lack, well, let's face it, the flair and know-how to pull everything together — furniture, lamps, linens, curtains, etc.

Customers usually come in with a theme, around which they plan an entire decorating scheme. White-painted, distressed, or pine furniture and casual linens in cool colors are in demand — the cottage look that shabby chic evokes.

Painted furniture "is very hot right now. It's not a phase," says McNeice. She adds, "Country is still strong, but it's new country, not primitives."

Pauline Golden of Wisteria, also on Front Street, says people are attracted to shabby chic because it recreates a comfortable, nostalgic look without the expense of more pricey "antiques."

The shop specializes in casual, hand-painted furniture decorated in striking colors. The furniture is often painted with flowers, vines or seascapes, a look that works well in summer cottages and less formal settings.

"I myself think it's a happy, whimsical look," says Golden. The shop does custom work to specifications.

Old Staffordshire ceramics offer affordable variety

You can still buy 18th and 19th century English Staffordshire pottery at auction for $200 to $900. These aren't damaged or restored pieces. Even at dealer prices they are still one of the best antique buys around.

For instance, a salt-glazed, mid-18th century tureen had an estimated value of $300/500 at a recent Skinner auction. At the same auction, a late 18th century black transfer tea caddy had an estimate of $300/500. It hasn't always been so. In the 1920s, '30s anything Staffordshire found collectors willing to pay big bucks. Especially popular were the Staffordshire dogs that were placed on fireplace mantles, and historical figures such as generals and kings. Even in the 1960s, as a beginning collector, I purchased an overpriced brown transfer print milk jug that the dealer felt "could be Staffordshire." So much for the whims of "fashionable" antiques. Perhaps it's time for a revival of interest.

Staffordshire, the heart of the 18th century English pottery district was more than 10 miles long and included the most important potteries such as Burslem, Enoch Wood and J & W Ridgeway.

SKINNER GALLERIES, BOSTON & BOLTON

A group of 18th century Staffordshire Creamware.

Enoch Wood is often referred to as the "Father of Pottery." He opened his business in 1784 and made many types of tableware, statues and punch bowls. In the 1830s he introduced his blue and white "Historical views" made for the American market. A single platter with his mark can sell for around $2,000. However, if you like the look other makers sell for several hundred dollars. Historical "London" views were also made.

Less familiar are lead-glazed creamware, colored-molded creamware and pearlware. Tortoiseshell and translucent color glazes are less common but still priced in the mid-hundreds (depending on the piece).

Among the earliest pieces showing up at auction, and not usually thought of a being Staffordshire, are redware and salt glaze pieces.

It is still possible to specialize in a single category of mid-18th century pieces such as teapots. Auction prices for them range from $200 to $700.

Small Staffordshire pieces four inches high, usually of animals, and originally made in pairs, can cost from $300 to $500 each.

CLUES

Though many pieces of Staffordshire are unmarked, there is a way to identify unmarked "Historical Views." Each of the potters created a wide border with a variety of floral, foliage and fruit designs. They are identified in "American Historical Views on Staffordshire China" by Ellouise Baker Larsen, published by Dover Books and found in museum book stores. Value is determined by the importance of the "view," maker, age and rarity.

The colors of the transfer prints are clues to age. The most expensive and earliest are dark blue coloring. Other colors were black, brown, green, maroon, pink and purple.

Reproductions of Staffordshire figures have never stopped being made in America and England.

Reproduction "Historical Views" plates, originally made in the 1920s/'30s will have the country of origin stamped on the back. It can also be marked "Commemorative."

Some pieces are only marked "stone," "stone china" or "semi-china."

For a beginning collector, coming across a piece in early dark blue, with a blurred design, can be confusing. Known as "Flow Blue" it was made by many Staffordshire potters from the 1830s to 1870s. When fired in a kiln, the pattern was sometimes hard to recognize. Later patterns were made 1880s/1900s in many countries of the world. Reproductions have been made since the 1950s and are marked "Flo Blue" or Romantic Flo Blue." Prices go up and down with popularity.

Emily's Attic a Victorian treasure shop

By Valerie Kroon
CORRESPONDENT

A walk through Emily's Attic is like browsing through a quaint Victorian showpiece accentuated with soft pastel flowers.

The shop, located in Anderson's Plaza on Route 139, Pembroke is tastefully decorated and refreshing. It is filled with well-placed antiques and old furniture decoratively painted by owner Shelley Parsons.

Parsons, of Abington, opened her shop in early December. It's been a long-held dream which has now come true.

"On our first date, my husband asked me what would I like to be doing. I said I would be so happy with an antique shop and having some of my artwork there."

And now, many years and three children later, Emily's Attic has become a reality. The shop is named for her daughter Emily, now 12. Parsons also has two sons, Aaron, 9, and Evan, who is 6.

Now that Evan's in first grade I could take the time to do this," she said.

With a degree in fine arts from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Parsons has been painting wall murals and doing stenciling until now. She was also selling her painted furniture pieces in a couple of shops, as well as being involved in a group shop selling antiques.

"I've always painted since I was a child, and did my own bedroom wall murals," she says. "Now I've decided to put it all together."

Parsons says she almost always paints on antique furniture "because it has more character." She does paint some newer pieces such as children's fanciful footstools.

She often uses a distress technique, painting an old bed, table or bureau, but creating the piece to continue looking old. In the shop's back room, geared more toward children's furnishings, the walls are painted with white clouds on a pale blue sky.

An antique child's bed is decorated with pastel pink roses. A bureau and bench are painted a soft green and adorned with blue hydrangeas. Of a three-drawer bureau, painted sky blue with a field of flowers, Parsons says, "That's my Monet bureau."

The front room is divided into country and Victorian, wall hangings and vintage linens. There are teddy bears dressed in garments and hats made of old lace and other materials.

The bears are decorated by Joanne Colletti of Quincy. Other consignors are Laura Harvey of Marshfield, who paints floor cloths, and Millie Reilly of Bridgewater who creates framed collages made of antique materials and trinkets. Gail Shedlock of Pembroke makes pillows and small quilt pieces.

In explaining how she set up her shop, Parsons says, "I'm trying to give decorating ideas, too."

One item she has a hard time keeping up with are the vintage linens, which Parsons says, "go out the door so fast — they're hard to come by in good condition."

Asked how she finds enough furniture pieces to paint, Parsons says, "Oh, I'm just a scavenger." Friends also help in the search for pieces, and she attends auctions and estate sales.

One problem she does have is "to force myself to not take things home." There's an old 1800s sled on display which Parsons said she had difficulty resisting, in her desire to bring it home for a Christmas decoration. She said she forces herself to stick to a pledge, that if something she finds is taken home, something must be brought from home to be sold in the shop.

Parsons does take orders for custom furniture, to match a theme or fabric, and wall murals. A portfolio of her creations is available in the shop for customers to view.

"I basically try to do a little bit of everything. If they want Victorian, I can do that. If they want funky, I can do that."

Of her new endeavor, Parsons says, "There's still so much I want to do but it will take time. In just three months, it's already evolved so much."

Emily's Attic is open Tuesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Parsons is also available at other times by appointment, for anyone wanting to discuss a custom order.

Collectible pressed glass is always in style and easily matched

By Mark Roeder

Pressed glass has been collected for decades, but the prices have remained reasonable all that time. There does not seem to have been a period when pressed glass was the "in" collectible, the way Roseville and Watt Pottery are today. It's never received a lot of media coverage and often seems almost invisible in the collecting world. Pressed glass is worth taking note of, however. It's beautiful, comes in hundreds of patterns, and is reasonable in price.

Most pressed glass was produced from the mid-19th century to about World War I. Some was also produced in the 1930s and '40s, but most of what is collected today dates to before the first World War. Pressed glass is the cheaper version of cut glass, but its beauty almost equals the brilliance of cut glass. It's hard to tell the difference between some pieces without close examination. The main difference between the two is that cut glass feels rather sharp to the touch, while pressed glass has a smoother feel. This is logical since the designs in cut glass are actually cut into the glass, hence the name. Most pressed glass was made in molds and therefore lacks the sharpness. Another identifying feature is the mold seams found in pressed glass, but not in cut. If there is a visible seam, then the piece is pressed.

A lot of price guides cite some pretty strong values for pressed glass. I've seen some hefty prices in shops and at antique shows too. It has been my experience that pressed glass can be purchased for very reasonable prices, however. I routinely spot nice pressed glass pieces for far less than the values listed in books. I purchased a beautiful wine goblet in the "Egyptian" pattern for only $1 at an auction. It was in excellent condition and a great buy for a piece of glass made around 1870. The value listed for this particular piece in price guides is $35 to $70. In this case, I found an unusual bargain, but it wouldn't surprise me at all to find the same piece elsewhere in the $12 to $18 range.

At a recent antique auction I picked up a large and ornate pressed glass bowl with beautiful starburst designs. The purchase price was $21. That's not a bad price at all for such a beautiful piece of glass. I see pieces similar to this selling for very reasonable prices on a regular basis.

Finding values for pressed glass in price guides is a difficult task. There are hundreds of patterns and most aren't listed anywhere. Many of those that are listed are so similar to one another that's it hard to tell them apart. I'm sure experienced pressed glass collectors have no problems telling one pattern from another, but most of us lack that skill.

I generally advise collectors to specialize, no matter what they collect. It's almost always a good idea to narrow one's collecting focus as much as possible. Pressed glass is the exception to the rule, however. I run across a great deal of pressed glass, but I fear that anyone trying to assemble pieces in a single pattern would have a tough time. I'm sure there are collectors that have assembled entire sets, but I'm sure it took them many years to do so.

Very few collectors or dealers are familiar with pressed glass patterns. If I mention the depression glass patterns of Cameo or Block, a lot of individuals will know exactly which patterns I mean. If I mention the pressed glass patterns of Bead Swag or Fishscale, few individuals will have any idea of what I'm talking about. For this reason, it's difficult to find pressed glass listed in classified ads, or on Internet auction sites. Most collectors and dealers just don't know the patterns, so their advertisements will read "pressed glass spoon holder with flower decoration" instead of "Primrose and Pearls pressed glass spoon holder." This makes it much harder for collectors to locate the patterns they wish to collect. As stated above, many patterns are very similar and nothing less than a photo will do to tell the difference.

The lack of familiarity with patterns does have advantage however. It is one of the main reasons that prices have remained reasonable. Pressed glass patterns are hard to identify and describe, so they are not as easily advertised or traded. Specific patterns are hard to find, but when found, the prices should be reasonable.

One great advantage of the similarity between patterns is that they can be mixed and matched with greater ease than other types of pattern glass. It's often possible to mix pieces from several patterns together and still have them look as if they are all part of one set. Even patterns that don't have that much in common look rather good together. This is true to such a point that it's unnecessary to collect just one pattern. The mix and match approach may be the best when it comes to pressed glass.

Collectors should take great care when purchasing pressed glass. The intricate patterns make it hard to spot damage. Chips, even serious chips, and cracks are hard to see. If a buyer does not carefully check over a piece before purchasing it, he or she may get home to find chips or other damage that wasn't obvious at first glance.

There is an upside to the difficulty of noting damage. Most visitors to your home won't notice if a piece is damaged. I have a small pressed glass bowl that many visitors admire. It's very detailed, very beautiful, and has a very big chip. No one ever takes note of the chip, however, because the pattern of the piece hides it well. One can look right at the chip and not really notice it. It appears to be just part of the pattern until one looks long and hard at it. Such difficulty in spotting damage almost negates the damage itself. One should not pay mint prices for damaged pieces, however.

Pressed glass is a wonderful collectible that can fill a home with nostalgia and beauty. In this day when so many things are becoming too expensive to collect, pressed glass remains reasonable and even bargains can be found. Keep your eyes open as you scour antique shows, auctions, and shops. You're sure to find good buys that will get your own pressed glass collection started. You'll find that collecting pressed glass will bring you hours of enjoyment.

"The Collector's Encyclopedia of Pattern Class" by Mollie Helen McCain. This is a wonderful price guide that is a great help to new collectors. The patterns are divided into sections like "stars," "swirls," and "animals" that makes them much easier to locate than if they were just listed alphabetically. The patterns are represented in drawings instead of photos which is just what is need with pressed glass. There are hundreds of illustrations with prices. Pressed glass syrups are always very popular. This circa 1870 example was found for $35 in an antique mall. Many variations can be found ranging in price from $30 to well over $100.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

The difference between home inspectors, appraisers

When buying or selling a home today, consumers often utilize the services of specialized professionals. Understanding the appropriate role of each may become confusing.

According to Richard H. Clough, executive director of the New England Chapter of the American Society of Home Inspectors, confusion often exists in the distinction between home inspectors and appraisers.

"Although both are vital to the real estate process," Clough said, "an appraiser is not a home inspector, and a home inspector is not an appraiser." Appraisers assess the monetary value of a home, while home inspectors provide an insight and evaluation into the property's physical condition.

"Although both are vital to the real estate process, an appraiser is not a home inspector, and a home inspector is not an appraiser."

Richard H. Clough, executive director
New England Chapter of the American Society of Home Inspectors

Distinct Roles

In an effort to eliminate some of the confusion, ASHI-New England offers the following distinctions between the two professions:

• Home Inspectors: Educate and Inform — Home inspectors identify visible, existing conditions of a home, from a construction and infrastructure standpoint, and provide a written report describing the systems and components that may need major repair, or fail to function properly. Home inspectors are usually hired by a prospective purchaser, or seller of a home.

• Appraisers: Estimate Market Value — Appraisers provide an estimate of market value for use in making real estate decisions. Appraisers are usually employed by lenders to estimate the value of real estate involved in a loan transaction.

Quality home inspectors have a thorough knowledge of all building components, whether structural or mechanical, know how buildings function, and where problems are likely to exist. While home inspectors are typically retained by prospective home buyers, more and more sellers of homes are hiring home inspectors to determine defects before they place a home on the market. When sellers retain home inspectors, they are seeking to locate building defects and get them repaired in advance to speed along the sale, and make it less hassle-free.

Clough said within his voluntary organization, home inspectors enter as "candidates" for a minimum of six months. Full membership requirements are vigorous and include completion of at least 250 fee-paid professional home inspections and successful completion of two written exams to test one's knowledge of building systems and components, report writing, the organization's "Standards of Practice," and the diagnosis of building defects.

Appraisers assess the monetary value of a home, while home inspectors provide an insight and evaluation into the property's physical condition.

Once granted membership, ASHI-NE members are expected to continue their education, like most other professions. Members are required to earn 40 membership renewal credits every two years in order to keep current with new technology and building practices.

For the name of a home inspector in your area, log on to the Chapter's web site at www.ashi-newengland.org, or call (603) 228-1231, during normal business hours.

Good advice for landlords

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

Boris Mogilevsky had read that America was the land of unlimited possibilities and opportunities. He was off to a good start with his new job as superintendent of two (2) fine buildings located at 105-107 Beacon St., Boston. Part of his compensation included an apartment at 105 Beacon, which was to be his new home. Mogilevsky's high hopes soon faded and a once promising relationship gave rise to the Superior Court case of Mogilevsky v. Doris Keating and others.

During Mogilevsky's first winter, the gas company shut off the gas stove due to a dangerous condition. As a result, the heat remained inadequate for the ensuing four years. The sad story continues with no hot water from October 1997 to February 1998.

Our story begins innocently enough in July, 1994, when Boris Mogilevsky, a Russian immigrant, was hired by Keating & Co., to act as superintendent for 105-107 Beacon St., Boston. As compensation, Mogilevsky was provided the basement apartment at 105 Beacon St.

During Mogilevsky's first winter, the gas company shut off the gas stove due to a dangerous condition. As a result, the heat remained inadequate for the ensuing four years. The sad story continues with no hot water from October 1997 to February 1998. Living conditions were made worse by the continuous wafting of fumes, gases and humidity from an improperly vented washer and dryer.

You can well imagine Mogilevsky's discomfort as he registered many complaints with the landlord. Apparently annoyed by Mogilevsky, the landlord responded in a derogatory manner stating, "since Mogilevsky was Russian, he should be used to the cold." Finally, the landlord assented and agreed to correct the heating, renovate the kitchen, and vent the laundry. Well, time passed and nothing was corrected. In response to a new barrage of complaints, in April, 1998, the landlord advised Mogilevsky that he was fired. He was ordered to

Your credit score plays an important role in getting your loan approved

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

Carol Bulman

What's your credit score?

If you're like me, you have a hard enough time remembering the birth dates of your children, never mind your credit score. But is your credit score something you need to know?

You don't necessarily have to know what your score is, but if you're in the market for a mortgage, this figure will be used in determining the interest rate you will pay — and whether you will qualify for a mortgage at all.

This score is derived from a secret formula compiled by a company called Fair, Isaacs & Co.; the formula reflects the probability that you will repay your debt on time. Since Fair, Isaacs & Co. produced the formula, credit scores are sometimes referred to as FICO scores.

Historically, a lender reviews a borrower's credit report, which shows existing credit and past credit accounts. It also will indicate open balances and your repayment history. All of these factors are considered in determining your credit worthiness. Credit scores are a more statistical approach for determining the same thing.

Historically, a lender reviews a borrower's credit report, which shows existing credit and past credit accounts. It also will indicate open balances and your repayment history. All of these factors are considered in determining your credit worthiness.

A lender will order a credit report through one of three credit bureaus: Experian, Equifax and TransUnion. That data is sent through a statistic model to determine the score, which ranges from 360 to approximately 900 — 360 being the worst, 900 the best.

Your full credit profile, including information on employment and assets, is considered together with your credit score. The score reflects your history of paying your debts in a timely way, the number of credit cards you have and whether you have an outstanding lien or bankruptcy in your file.

The advent of credit scores has led to more lending based upon the existence of risk, a concept known as risk-based pricing. The interest rates on loans offered to consumers are based on the borrower's level of risk. Should you be concerned about the result of your credit score if you are contemplating the application of a mortgage? Most certainly, but there are steps you can take to better position yourself:

1. Be sure that you pay your bills on time. The longer your history of timely payment, the better your score will be. Don't waste any time,. start paying on time now.

2. It's best to pay down your credit cards as much as you can prior to applying for a mortgage. If you have to decide between paying down credit cards or making a larger down payment, talk to a mortgage specialist to determine which would make the most sense.

3. Avoid opening up any additional credit accounts before you apply for a loan. The more inquiries from different credit grantors, the lower your score.

4. Don't be tempted to take out new credit cards or increase your credit limits. This also will adversely effect your score.

5. Cancel any credit cards you are not using.

The Federal Trade Commission recently sponsored an inquiry into the concept of credit scoring, because lenders do not disclose to customers how the score is determined. This mysterious stance is holding Fair, Isaacs open to questions regarding equality and fair credit.

It's difficult to say how this will turn out, but for now, the logical thing for consumers is to maintain good credit. The better your credit, the higher your score, and that's your ultimate goal as a future mortgage applicant.

As a consumer, you have the right to obtain one free credit report per year. If you're contemplating a home purchase, review your credit to determine that it accurately reflects your situation. Errors in credit files sometimes can be time-consuming to correct, so it's imperative that you try to fix problems as soon as possible.

The chart on this page has the addresses and telephone numbers of the main credit agencies. The report you will receive will not have your credit score on it, however; the number is on the report that is sent to the lender.

For a full credit analysis, please contact a lender such as Conway Financial Services and we will be happy to give you a pre-qualification over the telephone.

For more information about pre-qualifying/pre-approval or other financing issues, call CFS at (781) 681-9400 or (888) 831-1181.

move out on or before Aug. 31, 1999.

For four years, Mogilevsky had suffered with improper living conditions, and now he was being punished for complaining. So began the Russian Revolution of 1998. Boris made a complaint to the Inspectional Services Department which issued a citation for several code violations. On Sept. 26, 1998, Boris filed two complaints with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD).

Foolishly, in March 1999, the landlord threatened to sue Mogilevsky because of the Inspectional Services and MCAD complaints.

The dispute was further escalated on July 30, 1999 when Mogilevsky filed a multi-count complaint in the Suffolk Superior Court.

Incredibly, to make matters worse for themselves, the landlord responded by reiterating the threats to sue Mogilevsky if he pursued his claims.

Here was a case where legitimate complaints fell onto deaf ears. Mogilevsky filed an eleven count complaint: (1) breach of warranty of habitability, (2) interference with quiet enjoyment, (3) willful failure to provide heat, (4) termination of employment and eviction in retaliation, (5) threatening to sue, (6) housing discrimination, (7) violation of Mass. Equal Rights Act, (8) violation of Fair Housing Act, (9) wrongful termination, (10) intentional infliction of emotional distress, (11) violation of Consumer Protection Act.

Discussion

Among the many issues considered by the court, was whether Mogilevsky was entitled to a tenant's protection. Since his apartment was compensation for services as a superintendent, was he to be considered a tenant, or an employee? Under Mass Law, chapter 186, a tenant is given a multitude of rights and protection. The court concluded that the purpose of Chapter 186 was to "secure decent and safe housing for the people in the Commonwealth. That certain individuals exchange services for housing does not place them outside the legislative policy requiring habitable housing in the Commonwealth. To find otherwise would leave categories of individuals such as nannies, caretakers, and housekeepers, among others, without recourse to decent and safe housing."

Decision

The landlord's Motion to Dismiss Mogilevsky's complaint was denied.

Mogilevsky is off and running with the opportunity to recover substantial damages including his attorneys fees and costs.

Landlords — Minimum heat required is 68 degrees from 7:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. and at least 64 degrees between 11:01 p.m. and 6:59 a.m. June 15 through Sept.15. It is usually much cheaper and easier to bring your apartment into compliance than to deal with the problems in court.

Paying homage to Aerosmith

guitar), and Jimi Zimmardi (keyboards).

All of the band members have "day jobs" but still find time to tour with the band, Byrnes said.

Draw The Line has toured all over the United States and Canada for the past decade, and they've done it out of "pure love for Aerosmith's music" said Byrnes, noting that the band does about 100-150 shows per year.

"Being in a band like this is more work than people realize," Byrnes said. "It takes a lot of long days and running from one gig to the next. It's a race against the clock."

But racing against the clock and performing repeatedly is a part of Draw The Line's history.

The band started about 10 years ago under the name Mass Production. Except for Byrnes, none of the current members of Draw the Line were part of Mass Production.

Byrnes said when he was in Mass Production, the band performed some Aerosmith songs but not a lot of them.

Then in 1991, Byrnes agent suggested the band change its name, and at the same time, switch over to performing a repertoire made up entirely of Aerosmith material.

"So that's what we did," Byrnes said. "At first, it was kind of a hard concept to accept, because we figured once we did this, we'd be stereotyped for life. But we decided to go with it, and I'm glad we did."

Byrnes said these days, Draw The Line sticks to playing a number of Aerosmith hits like "Dream On," "Back In The Saddle," "Rag Doll," and even the most recent hit "Don't Want to Miss a Thing."

"We like to play the songs that people are familiar with," Byrnes said. "And I think we're lucky that Aerosmith is just an incredibly popular band. That helps."

Byrnes said the band's shows are always crowded.

"I've seen people in the audience who I saw watching us 10 years ago! People have been really loyal to us, and they seem like they're willing to travel to see us," he said.

"I'm amazed at the longevity...how long we've lasted. And it's all because of the fans. They just haven't gotten tired of it."

Currently, Draw The Line is participating in various charitable events as well as gearing up for upcoming shows.

Byrnes said one of the band's big shows in store is scheduled for June 10 at Waterworks at Quincy's Marina Bay.

In the meantime, Draw The Line will be playing various shows around the area and assisting other up-and-coming bands in the area.

"We're always trying to help out other bands," Byrnes said. "We can draw pretty good crowds to clubs so that gives other bands chances to gain exposure."

Byrnes mentioned the band will also be putting together "a collective video documenting the past 10 year of the band" in the near future.

According to Byrnes, the band has no plans for slowing down anytime soon, despite its hectic, demanding schedule.

"We do this more for the love of music than anything else," he concluded. "If it wasn't for the love of the music, then we all probably would have quit long ago."

Renting beachfront properties in Hawaii

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. Can you suggest a source for renting a three-bedroom condo with three or four baths on Maui for a week this summer, preferably on the beach?

A. The cost of a three-bedroom during the summer months would vary depending on the property and its facilities. The cost can start around $250 a day up to $575 or more a day.

A good agency to start with is All Globe Travel, (800) 688-2254, or www.vacation2hawaii.com/), which has many beachfront properties in Maui, as well as on the other islands.

A sample of their properties in Kahana – 45 minutes from the main airport at Kahului, 10 minutes from Kaanapali, and 35 minutes from Kihei and Wailea – is the Kahana Village (rates start at $275 a day for a three-bedroom/three-bath-room condo) and the Kahana Outrigger ($215 a day).

Just south of Lahaina, about 30 minutes from the main airport, five minutes north of Kaanapali, and 25 minutes to Kihei and Wailea, is Puamana, with rates starting at $270 a day.

Out in Wailea (about 30 minutes from Kahului, and 35 minutes to Lahaina and Kaanapali), is Wailea Elua, one of the pricier properties, with rates starting at $575 per day.

Some agencies charge a finder's fee, but All Globe only charges an 11 percent tax, and requires a two- or three-night deposit upon reservations.

Q. We're visiting Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and hear it's possible to take a day cruise to the Bahamas from there. Can you give us information?

A. Here are two possibilities: the Discovery I claims to be the largest one-day cruise ship servicing this route and offers cruises to Freeport in the Bahamas with amenities such as an onboard casino, buffet meals, cabaret shows and disco. The cost is $149 per person and the trip takes five hours each way with three hours in Freeport.

For further information, call (954) 525-7800 or (800) 937-4477.

Sea Escape offers cruises once a month to the Bahamian island of Bimini. Cruises take three hours and give you one hour on the island. The cost is $32.95 per person.

For further information, call (800) 432-0900. For both trips you'll need proof of U.S. citizenship.

Q. I spend a lot of time on the Internet when I travel to New York City on business and I'd rather not lug my computer with me, nor do I want to pay for hotel phone charges when I work from my hotel room.

Is there a good midtown hotel that offers computers in the room along with high-speed Internet access? I'd like to find a place that charges under $250 a night if possible.

A. One good choice is the Avalon Hotel on East 32nd Street between Madison and Fifth. This hotel offers Gateway computers with nifty LCD screens and high-speed T-1 lines in about 30 of its 100 rooms. All other rooms have T-1 lines, but without the computer. There is a flat charge of $9.95 per day for Internet access and $14.95 per day for computer plus Internet access (as you're aware, you can easily pay more than $10 a day in phone charges if you spend a lot of time surfing the Net from a hotel room).

Although normal rates can be a bit higher than your budget, Quikbook, (800) 254-7188, or www.quikbook.com, the discount hotel reservation service, recently listed the hotel for $199 per night.

Q. Last summer, I was in Norway and fell in love with the country. This summer, my friend and I want to go back to hike in the mountains in the Bergen/Myrdal/Flam area. So far, we have had no luck locating a walking or hiking group to guide us. I have tried the Internet, but have not been able to locate groups that offer hikes in Norway, or anywhere for that matter.

Is there a Norwegian outing club that we could contact for a schedule of hikes, or just information?

A. Here are some organizations you can contact by phone or mail: Den Norske Turistforening (DNT, The Norwegian Mountain Touring Association); Storgata 3, Postboks 7 Sentrum, 0101 Oslo; Administration: Telephone plus-47 22822800; fax, plus-47 22822801; Information line: Telephone plus-47 22822822; fax, plus-47 22822823; Bergen Turlag (a local mountain touring organization in Bergen, affiliated with DNT); Tverrgaten 4/6, 5017 Bergen; Telephone, plus-47 55322230; fax, plus-47 55328115; and Norske Tindeklub (Norwegian Alpine Club), v/Egil Fredriksen, Srkedalsveien 202b, 0754 Oslo.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Erin Brockovich (B+)

A good old-fashioned Hollywood star vehicle is a rarity in movieland these days, at least ones featuring women. (Throw Harrison Ford in anything and you've got one of the breed, but find a woman who can open a movie at top speed and you've a rarity.) Julia Roberts, she of the remarkable mouth and seemingly endless hair, hasn't had a role as juicy as this since "Pretty Woman," and this is a more heartwarming and less problematic film than that, based on real events and focusing on the good fight between virtue and evil. How can it miss?

It can't miss. Erin Brockovich (Roberts) is a former beauty queen, twice divorced, mother of three little ones, out of work and out of pocket, whom we first meet losing an accident case against a deep pockets guy in a fancy car who rammed into her and put her in traction. Her ambulance-chasing attorney, Ed Masry (Albert Finney, substantial and oddly alluring in a huffing, puffing, butterball way) hasn't been able to win for her. All her efforts to get a job are foiled by her lack of experience and not helped by her choice of outfits, which are to the last one garish, too short, too tight, too revealing, too (dare one say it?) tacky. Finally she forces her way into her attorney's office and demands a job, any job, anything will so, and if she can't pull her weight, Ed can fire her. Reluctantly he accepts. Nobody seems to want her around even as eye candy, but then the real Erin, whom we see in a tiny cameo, isn't Julia Roberts who, as Erin, works hard and wears a zillion outfits.

Poking around in the files, Erin comes across a pro bono case, containing medical reports, and realizes, after more poking around and some on-the-spot inquiries, that Pacific Gas & Electric has been dumping chromium, a toxic chemical, into the water supply of a down-scale L.A. suburb. This has been contributing to or actually causing all sorts of cancers in the denizens of this unappealing place. The melodrama is clear from this point on: Erin will try to convince Ed to go after PG&E, Ed will be reluctant, PG&E will bring in its heavy hitters to try to stymie the legal maneuverings of our heroine, and so on. The plot's straight out of Screenwriting Made Easy 101 but succeeds just the same, by transcending the cliches and the stereotypes and by virtue of Roberts' bravura performance.

Julia Roberts has a word with a slightly befuddled Albert Finney.

As Erin she actually cares about the people she wants Ed's firm to represent. We see her querying these people on their problems and coming to know them, not as statistics but as people, not as illness data but as victims of the cavalier attitude of a huge public utility toward its customers. Roberts is aided in this effort by a fine supporting cast, in addition to Finney, especially Aaron Eckhart ("In the Company of Men") as the Harley-riding biker next door, who becomes her babysitter and Mr. Mom. This is the film "A Civil Action" could have been but wasn't.

Train mitigation turns to historic town properties

Cohasset follows Hingham's lead by hiring consultant

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The town's best chance to achieve significant mitigation measures from the MBTA concerning the Greenbush commuter rail line may be its historic properties.

Before the MBTA can surpass the 30 percent engineering level on the Greenbush project, it must get a Section 106 permit, which governs historic properties.

"Section 106 is a federal law which says any major infrastructure project cannot cause the deterioration of any historic properties," said mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber.

The Army Corps of Engineers is the federal agency which grants Section 106 permits, which also must be signed by the Mass. Historical Commission.

The key to getting vibration mats, fencing, acoustic windows and other mitigation measures is getting the MBTA to agree that homes or other buildings are eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places, according to Wendy Frontiero, the Beverly architect who has been leading Cohasset through the Section 106 mitigation process since March 13.

"The Mass. Historic Commission and the Army Corps are taking a firm stance and making sure these things don't get glossed over."

Town meeting gives nod to $41.8M school project

Override ballot vote is April 8

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset is one step closer to major renovations of two of the town's three public schools.

Town meeting voted by the necessary two-thirds majority Saturday to approve the estimated $41.8 million renovation of Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle-High School.

With the 60 percent reimbursement the town has been approved for by the Mass. School Building Assistance Bureau, the cost of the project to Cohasset taxpayers is estimated to be $16.7 million.

Voters will determine the final fate of the project at the April 8 town election, where a simple majority is required to approve the debt-exclusion override needed to finance the renovations.

Should the renovation project be approved at the election, Town Accountant Michael Buckley has estimated the average taxpayer in Cohasset, with a home valued at $358,500, can expect to pay a total of $10,291 over the 22-year period from FY 2002 to FY 2024. The average cost per year would be approximately $468, with a cost per month of $39.

Members of the school committee and school facilities committee applauded wildly after Saturday's vote, which was not close enough to require a hand count.

"We certainly are pleased with the way town meeting went," said school facilities chairman Rob Spofford. "I think the message came across that something needs to be done, and that our option is the least expensive option for the town of Cohasset."

The Sullivan gym at the high school was packed Saturday for the first session of the annual town meeting that concluded Monday night.

Despite the town meeting approval, Spofford said the school facilities committee is not taking a successful override vote for granted on April 8.

"I think the message came across that something needs to be done, and that our option is the least expensive option for the town of Cohasset."
— School facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford

"Many times, town meeting has not been a total barometer of the feeling in the town as a whole," Spofford said. "We recognize town meeting is only the first step in the process. Over the next two weeks, we plan on getting the word out about why this project is in the best interests of Cohasset."

Voters were provided with a 19-page report by the school facilities committee to follow along with Spofford's presentation in support of the article.

Spofford highlighted the committee's contention that the $41.8 million project, which includes additions at both schools but is eligible for 60 percent state reimbursement, would end up costing the town less than the cost of doing renovations without any additions. A project which focused solely on renovations would be ineligible for state reimbursement.

"A renovation-only project would cost roughly $20 million ($19.3 million)," Spofford said. "It does address the physical needs, but it does not address educational or enrollment needs. The $41.8 million reimbursable project will end up costing $16.7 million. It's $2.6 million cheaper to go with the reimbursable option."

Library set for old Osgood school

Town meeting overwhelmingly approves plan

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With scarcely any debate, town meeting voters approved the $2.9 million plan for a new town library at the former Osgood school.

Although a two-thirds margin was necessary to approve the borrowing article, it still passed by a wide margin.

The lack of opposition to the article was due primarily to the financing plan for the project, which does not involve raising the tax rate.

The financing plan, developed by the library trustees in conjunction with Town Manager Mark Haddad and Town Accountant Mike Buckley, includes an expected library construction grant of $1.45 million from the Mass. Board of Library Commissioners to pay half of the project's cost.

The remaining $1.45 million is to be funded through the $700,000 which the Library Trustees expect to raise through private donations and the sale of the current Paul Pratt library, appraised at $700,000 in 1998.

Haddad said he expects a cost of $200,000 may remain after fundraising is complete and the Pratt library is sold, but said the remaining $200,000 could replace existing debt service and be paid back over 20 years.

"The cost-benefit of this proposal is absolutely clear. This is a deal."
— Capital budget committee member Samuel Pease

Capital budget committee member Samuel Pease said achieving a $2.9 million library without raising taxes is remarkable.

"The cost-benefit of this proposal is absolutely clear," Pease said. "This is a deal."

Michael Sullivan, 21 Gammons Road, said the town would be missing a golden opportunity if it didn't approve the library plan.

"How often does a committee come forward with a proposal as wonderful as this, agree to raise $700,000 on its own, and not raise our taxes?" Sullivan asked. "This is a no-brainer."

The lone voice of opposition to the proposal came from James Lagrotteria, 104 Howe Road, who proposed an amendment to eliminate the funds generated from the sale of the Pratt library as part of the financing plan.

"I don't want this body to fund articles with unknown monies," Lagrotteria said. "I'm against setting that precedent."

Haddad said he realized the financing plan is unorthodox, but said he is confident the plan will be successful while not raising taxes.

"While I understand this has never been done before, this is a very innovative way to fund a project without impacting the tax rate," Haddad said.

Applications for library construction grants are due in September, with grant awards slated to be announced next February. Once construction begins, library trustee Sheila Evans said the Osgood library should be completed within eight to 10 months.

Solid waste facilities nixed on 3A

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The town's legal battles with Cohasset Heights, Ltd. concerning expansion of the now-defunct Cohasset Heights Landfill may have been put to rest by Saturday's town meeting vote which rezones the property.

The light industrial district along Route 3A in which CHL lies was changed to a technology business district by the necessary two-thirds vote needed for a zoning change. Solid waste facilities such as landfills and transfer stations are prohibited in the new district, as is manufacturing.

Approval for the zoning change must be given by the state Attorney General's office for it to take effect.

The vote to rezone the property came after a lengthy and impassioned debate. When a vote was finally taken, Town Moderator George Marlette declared the article defeated, indicating he didn't hear the two-thirds majority necessary to pass the zoning change.

Two proponents of the article, John McNabb and Kevin O'Donnell, asked for a hand count after Marlette declared it defeated. As those supporting the article held their green voter cards aloft, it appeared the vote might be very

Open Space survey

A survey from the Open Space Committee has been included in this quarter's tax bills.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee, urges you to take the time to fill out the questionnaire because the results will help the Open Space Committee define open space and recreation priorities during the next five years.

"Every five years the state mandates that towns file an open space and recreation plan. Our plan expires in June 2001, and the Open Space Committee is in the process of updating it. If we don't have an active plan, we won't be eligible for many state grant and loan programs," she said.

Forms are available in the town hall and library, and surveys may be left in the drop boxes at both locations.

The Open Space Committee is also looking for one new member. Anyone interested should call Cook at 383-6315.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

MS walk steps toward a cure

On April 8 thousands of friends and neighbors will take steps to find a cure for multiple sclerosis.

The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 8, at the South Shore Community Center with a 10K route through the town and along the shore of Cohasset Sandy Beach. The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk, presented by the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, is one of 21 walks across Massachusetts and New Hampshire united by one goal—to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system with lifelong physical and emotional effects.

MS Walk participants raise funds to support research, education, and advocacy that enhance the quality of life for 10,000 people with MS and their families throughout Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Train mitigation turns to historic properties

Mass. Historic Commission for four years and serves as a consultant on historic preservation on the Big Dig, was hired with $2,100 the mitigation committee had left over from an environmental consultant hired two years ago.

Gruber said Frontiero's knowledge of the Section 106 process will be invaluable to the town as Cohasset's historic properties along the rail line are inventoried.

"It was well worth the town's effort to hire an expert," Gruber said. "Hingham's had a consultant for a year or two. When applicable, Section 106 is probably the most powerful mitigation tool we have. There are so many historic sites along the Greenbush line."

Scituate followed suit by hiring Frontiero after a presentation at the town's Tuesday night selectmen's meeting.

"This is the last line of defense we have in mitigating for the homes along the line," said Scituate selectman Joseph Norton. "This (information) is what they'll (MBTA) judge levels of mitigation on and its the only way I know to help the people directly affected by the return of the Greenbush Line."

To achieve a Section 106 permit, the MBTA must determine it has adequately inventoried a town's historic structures along the rail line and provided sufficient mitigation for those properties.

The mitigation committee met with representatives from the Army Corps, Mass. Historical, and the MBTA last Thursday to discuss the town's historic inventory along the rail line. The Cohasset Common Historic District is already listed on the National Register, but Frontiero has identified others.

After meeting with Gruber and Cohasset town archivist David Wadsworth, Frontiero said she put together recommendations for four different districts that could be considered eligible for listing on the national register of historic places.

Among the districts Frontiero considered to be eligible are a Jacob's Meadow district, which would include both sides of Elm and Summer streets, a Lincoln Hillside district, to include James Lane and Pleasant Street, and a district to include the stretch of South Main Street from Summer Street to Beechwood Street.

"We give a broad overview of the possible historic properties and the burden is placed on the T to investigate," Frontiero said.

An environmental consulting firm hired by the MBTA did some investigating this weekend, looking for the remains of the roundhouse and turntable of an old railroad station located beneath the town parking lot.

"The buildings were shaped like the outside of a wheel," Gruber said. "A locomotive would come into the station and would come onto this platform which would rotate the train to the right slot. This way the trains were allowed to turn 180 degrees in a relatively small space."

Kevin Dasey, MBTA senior project coordinator for Greenbush said remains of the roundhouse and turntable were indeed found under the town parking lot.

"We expected to find the remains and the remains were found," said Dasey, who added a full report on the findings would be completed in about two weeks.

As more historic structures are identified, Gruber said the mitigation available for the town will increase.

"We're working very hard to consider buildings close to the tracks," he said. "From a mitigation perspective, it makes sense to make sure historic structures are identified. The MBTA can't do anything to take away from areas deemed to have historic value. There's a much more stringent standard which has to be used."

Frontiero said the higher standard for historic places can significantly enhance the appearance of structures relating to the rail line.

"If they're putting in acoustic windows for noise mitigation, those have to be appropriate to the historic building," she said. "Grade crossings and fences have to be appropriate and maintain the historic character of an area. The Mass. Historic Commission and the Army Corps are taking a firm stance and making sure these things don't get glossed over."

Gruber said such a stance will ultimately benefit Cohasset if acted upon correctly.

"All we're trying to do is get the best deal possible for our people," he said.

Staff writer Alice Coyle also contributed to this report.

Detective sheds light on drug scene

Marijuana, Ecstacy among drugs commonly used by teens

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While Cohasset is known for its beautiful coastal settings and high level of wealth, it is far from isolated from the problems of illegal drug use which plague many other communities.

That's the message police Det. Gregory Lennon delivered to a meeting of the drug and alcohol committee last Wednesday night at the Teen Garage.

Lennon specializes in drug investigations and is a member of both the Norfolk County Drug Task Force and South Shore Drug Task Force. He said there are up to a dozen "hard-core heroin users" in town and said cocaine is routinely abused as well.

"Cocaine is used by people on Jerusalem Road with million-dollar homes to lobstermen, construction workers, you name it," Lennon said.

Members of the drug and alcohol committee were most concerned with drug use among the town's teenagers. A theft of Ritalin from the high school nurse's office two weeks ago has heightened awareness of kids in town abusing drugs.

Lennon said Ritalin can have a calming effect on the adolescents it is prescribed to, but has a different effect on others who break the pills into powder and snort it.

"When the snort it, it's like speed," Lennon said.

Lennon said some Cohasset teenagers are also abusing the designer drug known as Ecstasy, which is sold at all-night dance parties called raves, commonly held in warehouses in New Hampshire and Maine.

"On a regular basis, we have kids from Cohasset piling into cars and going to raves in New Hampshire and Maine," Lennon said. "The drug makes them feel euphoric and they dance all night long. It gives them a heightened sense of awareness which can last up to 12 hours."

Teenagers who attend raves aren't drinking alcohol while there, according to Lennon.

"Everyone's drinking bottled water," Lennon said. "They don't mix beer and rave drugs."

Lennon said Ketamine, an animal tranquilizer, is also being abused by teenagers.

"There's a big problem with Ketamine among high school kids, and there has been for a while now," he said. "It's a liquid and kids heat it in an oven. The liquid dries very rapidly and they snort it."

Teenagers are breaking into veterinary clinics to get a hold of Ketamine, according to Lennon, who said Marshfield and Hanover clinics have recently been broken into.

Lennon said Ketamine basically paralyzes people for a time.

"They call it going into a K-hole," Lennon said. "One way to spot it is that those who do it for a significant time get paler and paler."

Marijuana use, according to Lennon, is also prevalent among teenagers.

Mike Gill, director of health education at the Cohasset High School, said it is impossible to completely eliminate drug use among teenagers.

"We have a huge problem with alcohol and marijuana, as most schools do," Gill said. "There isn't a high school in America where some things aren't going on. Kids aren't stupid. They aren't going to do it in front of teachers."

Lennon said the police department has an anonymous drug hotline for anyone with information about drug dealing in town. He said if a student is caught dealing drugs at school, he or she will be prosecuted.

"If someone is dealing drugs to our high school students, it's our duty to bring them in," he said. "If it comes to my attention, nothing will stop me from making an arrest."

While some problems inevitably arise, Gill said drugs are not a huge problem at Cohasset High.

"I like to think most of our students are protected," he said. "You can't cure everything but I feel the kids are in a very safe environment."

Census 2000

Census 2000 forms were mailed out recently to households throughout the state. There's still time to return your U. S. Census Bureau form just in case the task has not made it to the top of your To Do List. Census workers will come to your house the last week of April if you do not return the form.

An awful lot is riding on the federal government being able to keep an accurate count of population growth and other demographic changes. Okay, nobody's exactly in a hurry to give the government any more information than is absolutely necessary, but this is one instance where withholding information does more harm than good. All data recorded is confidential and will not be shared with any other government agency such as the FBI, the IRS or the INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service).

Respondents are asked a few simple questions including, name, date of birth, sex, race, telephone number where you can be reached for clarification, the number of people in the household and whether you rent or own your residence.

The census is important because it determines everything from federal funding to political representation.

"We're taking every step possible to raise awareness and ensure the most accurate census count in three decades," says William Francis Galvin, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

In a census alert issued recently, Galvin pointed out that in the 1980 and 1990 census counts, Massachusetts lost two Congressional seats and millions of federal dollars based on population grant formulas to other states.

Census Director Kenneth Prewitt urges residents to fill out their census form without delay. The first official U.S. census was conducted in 1790 by then Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson.

"The United States Constitution requires a census of the United States every 10 years. Everyone living in the United States on April 1, 2000 must be counted. By completing your census form, you will make sure that you and members of your household are included in the official census count," says Prewitt.

The idea, of course, is to get the best possible count for the state of Massachusetts. By getting an accurate count, "We can achieve our goal of protecting our Congressional voices in Washington D.C. and getting our fair share of federal funding for programs that benefit every man, woman and child" in the state, says Galvin.

Official census counts are used to distribute federal and state government funds, grants, and direct aid to communities. This translates into dollars and cents for highways, schools, health facilities, job training programs and many other vital programs and public services.

Among other things, the census determines how Congressional seats are apportioned among the 50 states for a period of 10 years, or until the next official census count. Information collected by the census also reveals demographic shifts and population changes, critical for infrastructure planning. Many South Shore have shown leaps in growth during the past decade.

So if your census form is gathering dust already, don't waste any more time filling it out and dropping it in the mail, today.

Train talks

TO THE EDITOR:

As town officials of Scituate debate the MBTA over the Greenbush rail layover station and town officials in Hingham mull a tunnel under the square, I wonder why the towns of Weymouth and Braintree are notably absent from any mutual discussions on this project. Especially where they are playing host to dozens of heavy diesel air-particulate polluting locomotives daily and would be entertaining at least an additional 24 trains if the line is built.

A recent Braintree Greenbush Mitigation Committee meeting concluded Feb. 14, after studying the effects of the rail line on the Weymouth Landing section of town, "the gains of this proposed project will not outweigh the impacts on area residents." This negative report on the project exemplifies, once again, the exploitation of the town of Braintree by the MBTA and by State Rep. Joseph Sullivan, Transportation Committee chairman.

I applaud the towns of Scituate, Hingham and Cohasset in efforts to spare their towns from the adverse effects of this senseless project and hope Weymouth and Braintree will join in discussions on sensible and safer alternatives.

Against school project

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset residents have been inundated with a very organized operation to persuade us to spend $41 million on a school project, led by the school PAC "Campaign Marketing Committee." There are blatant inaccuracies and omissions in their information that was exposed at the March 25 town meeting.

1. It costs $10 million less to build two brand new schools.
2. State reimbursement is available for all the proposals not just the $41 million package.
3. The old classrooms are only getting facelifts—no increase in size.
4. A large portion of the $41 million is being spent on the expansion and relocation of sports facilities.
5. They are going to build a huge domed gym at the Deer Hill along Sohier St. between the two existing driveways.
6. Even though their enrollment projections show a decline in the next decade, they are adding administration with more professional staff, secretaries and offices.
7. Their over-expansion plans call for a choking amount of high extra operational costs that will have to be funded through overrides.

They have clearly dropped the ball on this one. How can we trust that this $41 million is going to help the educational quality of our students?

It is evident that this is another rushed project that is not cost effective for the town of Cohasset or the taxpayers of the commonwealth. We should vote no on this override and insist on well thought-out plans that will economically meet our educational needs rather than busting the budget by building elaborate sports facilities.

School vote

TO THE EDITOR:

Last Saturday, Town Meeting overwhelmingly voted in favor of Article 13, a request to raise and appropriate funds for the renovation of Deer Hill Elementary School and the Middle-High School. By approving this article, voters have recognized the need to bring these important facilities up to the standard that a community such as Cohasset should expect and will appreciate. I want to thank the voters — of all ages — who supported this initiative, recognizing that a quality education is one investment that will benefit everyone.

I have two more requests. The first is easy. Go to the polls April 8 and support the over-ride that will complete the funding process for this measure. It should take about 10 minutes. The second requires a bit more of your time — about 12 years, but is just as important. Get involved and stay involved in your child's educational process. Ask questions, review homework, meet your kid's teachers — volunteer. Your student needs a partner in his/her education not only in first grade, but also in 12th grade. We can and will build fine facilities of which we can be proud, but it's up to you to do the rest.

Again, thanks again to all in the community for your support and affirmative vote on April 8.

Nancy B. Hertig
President, Cohasset PSO

Town complies with DEP landfill order

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has delivered an ultimatum to the town: fix a damaged monitoring well at the former municipal landfill on Cedar Street by May, 2000, or face criminal prosecution and hefty fines. The town will comply with the order, according to Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik.

On March 16, DEP issued a notice of non-compliance against the town for failing to repair the monitoring well, known as MW-3. The well is used to monitor environmental conditions and discharges at the former landfill. In November, 1998, a monthly inspection crew discovered the damaged monitoring well. The damage was reported to DEP in a report filed on Feb. 25, 1999. On April 1, 1999, DEP ordered the town to repair the well within one month. But a monitoring report delivered to DEP in November, 1999, revealed that the well still had not been repaired.

State environmental laws require landfill operators to continue monitoring environmental conditions at closed facilities long after the actual closure date. Because the town operated the Cedar Street landfill, it is responsible for monitoring environmental conditions at the facility.

Godzik said the town's environmental consultant, Camp Dresser and McKee (CDM), has been evaluating conditions at the landfill. According to Godzik, CDM was not convinced the town needed well MW-3 to effectively monitor discharges from the landfill. CDM had informed DEP that it was evaluating the efficacy of well MW-3.

"DEP basically said the well is needed regardless of what CDM thinks," Godzik said. "Since DEP feels strongly enough to write a letter of non-compliance, we will repair the well. It's a small cost to the town, only a couple of thousand dollars."

Godzik said CDM is in the process of obtaining bids by telephone from contractors who can repair the well.

COHASSET CARES

Wow, good for us!

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

By the time you read this, the vote will have been taken as to whether we have Pay-As-You-Throw in Cohasset or not. As I write this, over a week in advance of publication of the issue you are now reading, I can only speculate. After years, actually, of mulling over the matter, I am one of those who started in skepticism and now firmly believe in Buck-a-Bag or whatever you want to call the phenomenon. Yes, I see this matter as a bellwether, a symbol, an index of our culture, and this is the last time I will be able to write about it in limbo, as something out there, an offering to be accepted or refused, so obviously at this moment I can still, in a way, be "neutral." Will Cohasset take on or reject Pay-As-You-Throw?

Let's take the simpler alternative first. If the town goes for it, my conscience says, wow, good for us, we really are into values, we really do miss Harry Truman, Cohasset is really does CARE, as the column says, as our town logo says, we really believe in the worth of our town, we as individuals are not afraid of a little extra work for the good of the planet, and yes, Cohasset people want to grow spiritually. That's what PAYT means to me.

If, on the other hand, Cohasset rejects the matter, I am going to be very discouraged. For one thing, it certainly will mean that I did not do my job — as RTF educator, because given proper information, I feel any decent human being would vote for PAYT. I realize that one little column, one that isn't even a consistent weekly, hardly does the job. Proper publicity for a matter like PAYT required lots of front-page articles, interviews, handouts, panels on the local TV channel, and so on. Whom was I fooling?

See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Renew library books online

Most home users of the library's catalog (DialPAC) know that they can place or cancel holds online. But did you know that books can be renewed from your home computer as well? This is a feature of both the text version and the Web version of the DialPAC.

If you are using the text version, Choose #13 "Review Patron Record" from the menu (press the Enter key after each step). At the prompt, type in your library barcode number. Choose # 1 "Items Out" and type R (all the commands are listed at the bottom of the screen). Type the number of the item that you want to renew. The screen will show the new date due. Press Enter. Continue, book by book, or type Q to quit.

On the WebPAC, click on Patron Information. Enter your library barcode number. Highlight the item you want to renew. Then click the Renew button at the bottom.

In both catalog versions, the computer will not renew the book if other patrons are waiting for the book. In that case, please be considerate to the next reader and return your book as soon as you can. Of course, those who don't have a computer, can still renew their books from home. Just call the library at 383-1348, using that old-fashioned instrument, the telephone.

Birthday gift

Thirteen-year-old Cohasset Middle-High School eighth grader, Jenna Lowe, recently kicked off the new library's $700,000 fund-raising campaign by giving library director, Janet Husband a check from her babysitting earnings for $25 as a birthday gift for her father, library trustee Roger Lowe. This was the first donation received by the Cohasset Library Building Fund for the new library at the old Osgood School. Her father was thrilled with the gift and pleased to know that she understands the importance of giving back to the community.

Saving a cow's life

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

For a while there I thought I was going to have to take out a membership in PETA or at least send them a generous contribution.

PETA is an acronym for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, which is dedicated to moving our four-footed friends out from the back of the bus.

They kicked up quite a storm the other day by suggesting that college students — who don't really need much of a suggestion — give up milk and drink beer instead.

Boy, if they had suggested that when I was in college the Narragansett brewery would still be in business. I thought that milk was just another ingredient in a brandy alexander.

"If you drink milk, you are supporting a product that is horrible for human health, catastrophic for the environment and a living nightmare for the animals involved," said Bruce Friedrich, who is described as PETA's vegetarian campaign coordinator.

"You can drink beer responsibly. The same cannot be said about milk."

It is PETA's contention that milk is bad for you because it contains fat and cholesterol. Beer does not although it does contain alcohol which some folks regard as just as bad if not worse.

The campaign came on the heels of an announcement by UMass-Amherst that students over the age of 21 could keep 30 instead of 24 bottles of beer on ice in their dormitory rooms in case of emergency.

PETA even offered students a free bottle opener — known colloquially as a church key — with the message "Save a cow's life!" on one side and "Drink responsibly. Don't drink milk!" on the other.

This, of course, brought the Mothers Against Driving Drunk into the fray on the side of milk no matter what it does to human health or the environment or its cruelty to cows.

"We're appalled with it (PETA's anti-milk campaign) for the simple fact that underage drinking is the No. 1 drug problem among American youths," said Teresa Hardt, a spokesman for MADD.

It was like the American Cancer Society and the American Dental Association arguing which is worse for you, cigarettes or tootsie rolls.

PETA was about to go into Phase II of its campaign — a parody of the dairy industry's "Got milk?" ads with the milk mustache replaced by beer foam — when cooler heads prevailed.

It was all a gag, said Friedrich, to call attention to the dastardly treatment of cows in the factory milk farms and, just to prove their good intentions, PETA donated $500 to MADD and gave them a plug on their web site.

"We hope we helped save lives and prevented injuries due to underage drinking and impaired driving by speaking out against the campaign," said Hardt.

And, dash it all, at the same time Chancellor David Scott cut back student storage permits at UMass to 24 bottles.

Underage smoking bylaw fails

Opponents deem it impractical

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A proposed bylaw which would have fined those under the age of 18 for buying or using tobacco products and made parents liable for payment of the fines was defeated at town meeting Monday night.

Minors were to be fined $50 for the first offense, $100 for the second offense, and $200 for the third or any subsequent offense.

The proposal to fine minors for using tobacco products was actually never voted upon, as proponent Alex Koines amended the proposal to only fine minors for buying tobacco products after noticing opposition to regulating the use of tobacco by minors.

The proposal to fine minors for buying tobacco products was narrowly defeated by a vote of 69-64.

Responding to claims the bylaw would be unenforceable, Koines said he hoped the threat of the law could be enough to keep kids from smoking.

"We would never consider the repeal of drug and alcohol laws just because they're difficult or impossible to enforce," Koines said. "We're not seeking to harass children or their parents, but we need a fine to achieve the deterrent effect we're looking for."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the bylaw would have too much of a "Big Brother" effect.

"Our right to regulate stops well before this article," McMorris said. "I have four kids, and I'm probably a health nut when it comes to kids. I'd have them all eating tofu and organic vegetables if I could. But once we get involved with health issues, where does it stop? The people who brought forth this article are well-intentioned, but I think their approach is wrong."

"I remember prohibition, and it didn't work. In fact, the reverse happens."
John Hartshorne, 115 Border St.

John Hartshorne, 115 Border St., said attempting to ban teenagers from smoking with a new law could ultimately make the problem of underage smoking more prevalent.

"I remember prohibition, and it didn't work," Hartshorne said. "In fact, the reverse happens."

Selectman Thomas Callahan said voters should concentrate less on how difficult enforcement of the bylaw might be and think of its possible effects in preventing some minors from smoking.

"We're hung up way too much on enforcement," Callahan said. "A lot of traffic laws are difficult to enforce. The most important part of this is deterrence. I think the minor in possession of alcohol laws are a good analogy. It acts as a wake-up call to kids. I think this could work practically the same way as it does with alcohol."

Rick Flynn, 211 Fair Oaks Lane, spoke for the majority who defeated the article, saying parents, not the town, should deter minors from smoking.

"Why don't we all just say that parents should take responsibility for their children," Flynn said.

IT'S HAPPENING

Cohasset kitchen tour set for April 7

It has a little of everything including the kitchen sink. Five unique Cohasset homes, designer fabrics, lush floral arrangements, elegant table settings and tempting taste treats prepared by some of the area's best-loved caterers and it's all for your enjoyment as part of the South Shore Community Center's Fourth Annual Kitchen Tour, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., Friday, April 7.

As individual as their owners, each of this year's five kitchens reflects the vast and varied options available to today's homeowner when planning or decorating a kitchen, as well as the individual style which pervades today's entertaining.

Starting at Cohasset's landmark Lightkeeper's Residence — which serves as both respite spot and tour boutique — the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and village. Tour highlights include a Cohasset Golf Club course-side home, a unique village antique and a Newport cottage-style home with natural-set pool just beyond the kitchen.

Adding to the interest of the architectural details and personal interior design styles of the five homeowners will be the artistry of area design professionals, who will offer up table settings in the kitchens and dining rooms of each home.

And for the tour-goer who is left craving a little something to whet her pallet, each home as well as the Lightkeeper's Residence will feature catered refreshments.

With all homes open throughout the day, this unique tour can be seen on an individualized schedule. Attendees can take part of the tour, say, in the morning and complete the day after lunch.

Advance tickets are $20 through Friday, March 31, and $25 per person beginning Monday, April 3, through the day of the tour. Tickets may be purchased at the Community Center or by calling (781)383-0088. Ticket sales are limited, so advance purchase is suggested.

Funds from Kitchen Tour 2000 will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The center, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, is a non—profit organization founded nearly 60 years ago. It is dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

For more information about the kitchen tour or any of the center's courses, workshops or ongoing programs, call (781) 383-0088.

Summer credit courses using the great outdoors

The Summer Institute is a series of courses that are designed to expose students to a variety of topics through outdoor experiences which maximize use of New England's unique environment and history. Students enrolled in Summer Institute courses receive credit equal to course credit earned during the traditional school year and are, therefore, expected to successfully complete comparable academic work.

• Introduction to Maritime Studies — Grades 9, 10; July 10 - 28; Monday — Thursday, 9am - 1pm, 1-1/4 credits.

An Introduction to Maritime Studies is an inter-disciplinary three-week program designed to teach students the principles of marine biology, marine ecology, nautical science, and local maritime history. This course takes place in the context of a "Boat Journey" as students learn how to crew traditional pulling boats and turn them into research vessels.

• Field Biology — Grades 9 - 12, Level 1, on-going (June 30 - August 30), 1-1/4credits

This field research course allows students to participate in meaningful biological field research which directly benefits the local community. Last year's water quality study of Little Harbor will be continued this year.

• National Park Field Study — Grades 9 - 12 , July 31- August 5, 1-1/4 credits

National Park Field Study is a short term (5-7 days), experiential, on-site study and exploration of a national park. Through the experiences of low impact camping and recreation including hiking, kayaking, and climbing, students will study the park's ecology and its natural and human history.

• Internships — Grades: 9-12, interview required, June 30 - August 30, 1-1/4 credits

An internship is a guided study experience in the work environment. They are individualized "doing and studying" experiences in the workplace under the direct guidance of a mentor.

• An Introduction to Organic Farming — Grades 7 - 10, August 7 - 25, Monday - Thursday, 9am - 1pm, 1-1/4credits.

This is a hands-on participatory class in which students learn the scientific principles of organic farming through actual farming at Holly Hill Farms. Students and teacher will work and study alongside the Holly Hill Farm manager assisting him in all aspects of raising crops without the use of modern pesticides and insecticides.

To register or for more information, call Jack Buckley or Dave Magnussen at Cohasset High School, 383-6100. Courses are $75 with the exception of the national park field study in which students must pay for full travel, camping and equipment costs.

Easter egg hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct its 24th annual Easter egg hunt for children 3 through 11 years old, at noon, Saturday, April 8, at Deer Hill School field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter Bunny and helpers will be on hand.

Children will be divided into three separate chronological groups: group 1, ages 3 and 4 (with parent); group 2, ages 5-7; and group 3, ages 8-11.

Participants should gather around their designated area sign before noon and bring a small paper bag or container for candy.

Individually wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape and will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold onto it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are Cohasset Rotary Club, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post 9146, American Legion Post 118 and the Cohasset Police Association. Rain date will be noon, Saturday, April 15, at Deer Hill School field.

Animal shelter holds yard sale

The Scituate Animal Shelter will hold its annual yard sale Saturday, April 1, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Knights of Columbus Hall at 234 Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Scituate. Proceeds from the sale will be used to provide food and medical care for its many abandoned and abused animals. For information, call Susan at 781-545-4981.

Support for employee

On Saturday, April 1, there will be a benefit fund raiser and bake sale held at Stop & Shop in Cohasset from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. for Cheryle Sullivan an employee of Stop & Shop who has cancer.

Stop by the table and show support for Sullivan in her hour of need.

'She Captains' is new book

Noted maritime historian and author Joan Druett of New Zealand will speak and sign copies of her new book, "She Captains," Monday, April 3, from 7-9 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A.

Druett's new book, "She Captains," is a fascinating and comprehensive account of the bold sister sailors who also held forth on the high seas.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman: With seats up for grabs on the health board, recreation commission and housing authority – would you support making these boards appointed rather than elected?

SELECTMAN/ Michael Sullivan

Over the last few years we have selectively changed elected positions to appointed positions. For example, the manager of the DPW and the town treasurer used to be elected positions. Appointing a qualified candidate after conducting a thorough recruitment effort gives the town a much higher probability that the individual will be successful in a position versus an individual who campaigns for a position. Tactical positions are very different than strategic/policy positions. A selectperson is advancing the interests and sentiments of the town. The treasurer is managing the cash. The DPW manager is managing the maintenance of our infrastructure. Very different roles. The health board, recreation commission and housing authority are more closely aligned with a policy/sentiment of the town role than a tactical role. However, I do believe there are members of the community who would consider volunteering their time but would not campaign for a position. These changes deserve consideration and I would suggest that the Town Structure Committee weigh the pros and cons and make a recommendation to the board of selectmen.

SELECTMAN/ Robert Sturdy

Although there were three elected positions without candidates this year, there are contests for the other positions. In the future, elected town boards may work harder to recruit suitable candidates to fill vacancies. I do not advocate having the board of selectmen appoint members to the various town boards, commissions, or authorities. The power to fill these positions by the election process should remain with the citizens of the town.

SELECTMAN/ Leland H. Jenkins

I am always in favor of the electorate, as opposed to town officials or a troika, deciding whom should serve on any board. First, the appointed member of any board or committee does not have the same dedication to duty as the elected member, who has waged and won a campaign.

The campaign process is a broadening experience for both the candidate and the electorate. During the campaign process the candidate, while seeking votes, learns what the electorate is thinking, and the electorate hears the as yet unelected candidate debate the issues. A meeting of minds must occur in order for the candidate to be elected. Alternatively, appointed persons need only be available and/or popular.

Certainly, there will be times when candidates for elected offices do not come forward. When those times happen, the community usually finds a write-in candidate for that seat, sometimes two or three show up.

My point is, candidates can always be appointed. But if we order these boards to be permanently appointed, the option to elect people to those boards will be gone forever.

The process of election was forged by our forefathers, who emigrated here from lands where education was not a right, where participation in an election was not a right, and I think it would be a crime against America to change it now.

Planning board: Cohasset is a beautiful town, but much of Rte. 3A is an eyesore – especially when compared to Scituate and part of Hingham and Marshfield that share the state roadway. What can the planning board do to improve the way 3A looks?

PLANNING BOARD/ Randy Patterson

Cohasset chose a long time ago to have the majority of its business activity locate along Route 3A. Unfortunately in making this decision, little thought was given to ensure a consistency in the overall look and appearance. In our beautiful town, there are two views:

The picturesque look of a small New England seacoast town.

The look of an unregulated non-conforming business district.

I believe our town can improve its overall look throughout the Route 3A business district and recommend the following improvements.:

Create uniformity in the overall appearance and look of each Plaza.

Each plaza appears to have its own idea on what it should look like, and I believe it is this visual representation that creates the "eyesore."

Further define the by-laws to regulate how buildings should look with the goal of creating a "New England" look for each plaza. For a successful example of this zoning approach, one needs to look at Freeport, Maine. All of the buildings in town are in "unity" and blend into the overall look of the town. Even the town's local McDonald's was designed to look like a home.

Create uniformity for the size and colors of signs.

Further define the height and color of signs. Presently, the signs throughout Rt. 3A are a combination of sizes, shapes and colors and when collectively combined, create an additional eyesore.

I stress the planning board bring uniformity to the look and appearance of each building within this district.

PLANNING BOARD/ Chris Ford

Protecting the character and beauty of this Town is clearly one of the primary responsibilities of the planning board. Unlike Scituate, Cohasset does have a highway business district and while some might regret that decision made over four decades ago, it is a reality and the charge now is to minimize any potential adverse consequences while providing a mechanism for orderly growth. The planning board has an opportunity to influence the appearance of Rte 3A when proposals are submitted to make changes within the business district.

The two major changes to Rte 3A over the past dozen or so years have been the construction of the Stop and Shop and Shaw's Plazas. Both of these major projects underwent thorough scrutiny by the planning board and I believe that most observers would conclude that the results have been improvements over the previous uses in each of those locations. Undoubtedly there will be other substantial proposals coming forward in the future and these efforts will again give the planning board an opportunity to control and reshape the physical vistas of our highway business district. I look forward to being a member of the planning board and will take seriously the responsibility to protect the character and beauty of our community.

School committee: Due to low numbers, the high school gymnastics team successfully merged with Norwell High's team. Would you support offering some high school courses on a regional basis as a cost saving measure?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Chartis Tebbetts

Compared with most nearby towns, Cohasset has always been one of the smaller districts. Our size has motivated us to look from time to time at the option of regionalizing to save money and to offer more. As far as I know we have never been able to find evidence that we could in fact save money. Transportation costs would eat up any savings in staffing salaries.

The potential of being able to offer more, however, means that we must continue to examine the possibilities. In the case of the gymnastics team, we were able to offer the opportunity for coaching and competition to students who otherwise would have missed a great high school experience. I would support other similar opportunities.

Also important is to examine opportunities to enhance the educational opportunities of our students. Advanced Placement classes and foreign language classes could originate in a different district and be broadcast and televised into our classrooms. Perhaps some college classes could come into our high school by cable television also. We should always be on the alert for finding and making available through technology interesting and challenging — or remedial — courses for our students of any age.

Small often means that by standard measure, there are inefficiencies. We need to remember that small has tremendous advantages also. The challenge is to be creative with our advantage, and be efficient when we can.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Rick Flynn

I would certainly support offering some high school courses on a regional basis. Given the daily improvements in technology and communications, the opportunities to team up with other school districts or other institutions to offer various courses may become more plentiful. When examining these opportunities we have to make sure they are cost effective, while at the same time we need to be creative in terms of what courses are offered.

That being said we have to be careful not to see regionalization as a means to an end. Typically regionalization is examined as a means to reduce the cost of delivered services. During my tenure on the Advisory Board, the topic of regionalization came up quite often. Frustration with the costs of delivered services such as fire protection or dispatch services would force us to brainstorm on how we could reduce costs by regionalizing services. Unfortunately, even with the best intentions, we can't force other towns to join forces with Cohasset to reduce our costs. Many taxpayers discuss regionalization as an easy way to save money, the reality is that it is difficult to find partners. Without partners we can't really squeeze out more costs.

This formula can be compounded when applied to education. Given the strong position Cohasset maintains in education, we need to be careful who it might be that we look to team up with. In an effort to save money, we have to be careful that our educational product, which is one of Cohasset's strongest assets, does not become negatively impacted. If regionalization can add value while being efficient, we should certainly consider it. If it is only viewed as a money saving proposition we need to be careful how we proceed.

Library trustee: Is the library too dependent on volunteers to provide the service the town needs?

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Lance Norris

Yes, the library is currently understaffed. This is a problem that will only grow as the library expands into the old Osgood building. Volunteers are the backbone of any free library, but an adequate professional staff is needed.

Were I on the Board of Trustees last Saturday I would have had enough respect for the people of Cohasset to stand-up and tell them the truth. The school system's candor in regard to staffing of their new buildings was refreshing. The new, larger library at Osgood will require more staff as a part of it's operating budget to optimize the facility. At the very least, a 35 hour a week Library Technician at the L3 pay rate would need to be added. Are you going to have a 2.9 million dollar library and not spend a little less than an extra $40,000 a year to run it properly? Of course not, and I'm sure you'll be asked to do just that within the next three years.

Would you pitch a 2.9 million dollar library to the town, and then low-ball the projected operating budget just to head off any objections that might queer the deal? You would hope not. Maybe the current board really does believe the elimination of stairs has solved the staffing problem. Wouldn't that be sweet?

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Patience G. Towle

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is fortunate to have one of the best cadres of volunteers in Massachusetts. No other group was able to make the transition from manual circulation to computerized circulation. While it is true that we are the only library in the Old Colony Library Network that is able to staff its circulation desk with volunteers we are grateful for their ability to step up to the challenge. It is with great excitement that we have planned the new front desk at the old Osgood school library to accommodate volunteers and staff. In addition, we will continue to enjoy the volunteers' contributions to book processing and programs.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Carol Riley

As one of 23 volunteers who staffs the circulation desk at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, I have been able to see firsthand the valuable service volunteers provide, by freeing up the librarians so that they may better help our patrons. Volunteers check books in and out, answer phone calls, phone patrons whose reserved books have arrived and cover books. Library director, Janet Husband, tells me that in 1999, volunteers provided 1,700 hours of free labor.

So, while the library is not dependent on volunteers for service, the volunteers do provide valuable supplementary help to a superior professional staff.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE/ Agnes McCann

The library has for so many years enjoyed the valuable service of so many volunteers that it is an effort to imagine the library without them. It is a gift, and is welcomed. If the day comes that it is no longer given, the library and the town will have to consider how to manage without it.

Holden makes it official

On Friday, March 10, Hingham Selectman Michael Holden announced his candidacy for the office of State Representative from the third Plymouth District. Holden's announcement was held at the South Shore Country Club before a crowd of supporters, friends and family members. The event began a weekend kick-off for the campaign with Holden greeting voters in the towns of Cohasset, Hull and Hingham, which make up the Third Plymouth District.

Holden, who currently serves as the chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen, continues to serve as vice chairman of the Hingham Housing Partnership and as a member of the Hingham/Hull Rotary. He has also served as chairman of the New Lawyers Education Committee of the Massachusetts Academy of Trial Attorneys, where he now serves on the Board of Governors. He was an elected member of the Hingham Board of Health, has served as a volunteer coach with Hingham Youth Hockey and Hingham Youth Soccer and continues to accept cases on a pro-bono basis for Boston's Volunteer Lawyers Project. Holden said his experience, leadership and skills as an advocate were what is needed to ensure that the district received the representation and state resources it needs upon the resignation of its incumbent representative.

Michael Holden

"Experience and proven leadership skills are critical in advocating for our district on Beacon Hill," Holden said. If we do not have a qualified representative with experience in government, we will be at a terrible disadvantage when it comes to fighting for limited resources. I intend to put my experience and leadership skills to work in advancing the vision and new initiatives I have for the people of this district."

The date of the primary for state representative is Sept. 19.

Bradley campaign

Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley will kick off his campaign Saturday, April 1, at the Sons of Italy in Hingham.

With lots of food, music and political fun, friends and supporters will gather to ignite the Bradley campaign spirit.

During the next few months, the Bradley campaign will focus on grassroots campaigning, talking to voters one-on-one, and focusing on the issues that are important to Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Bradley won the Democratic primary for state representative in 1998, and ran a strong campaign against long-term incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray. With Murray retiring, Bradley is working hard to build upon his previous campaign and continue to earn support throughout the district. He has already begun going door-to-door in many neighborhoods to talk with voters. Bradley ran the same kind of campaign in 1998, knocking on over 12,000 doors in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

The April 1 campaign kickoff event will run from 7 to 10 p.m. and is open to the public. A suggested donation of $15 is appreciated. The Hingham Sons of Italy is located on the corner of Route 3A and Kilby street, 1/4 mile south of the rotary.

Madness takes over Cohasset

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The third month of the year is upon us, a time of spring, rebirth, and of course, the excitement of college basketball in the air.

People were able to watch the Bulldogs of Gonzaga beat the heavily favored number two seed St. John's, or Wisconsin win over Arizona, or North Carolina beat Stanford. The truth is, the only way to predict these exciting upsets is to pretty much guess.

That is what some people did.

How did some of the non-followers of college basketball pick the teams they did? Because after last weekend, those who have spent hours on end watching college basketball, game after game realized why exactly it is called "March Madness."

"That just shows how tough it is to win the tourney."
Cohasset coach Ron Ford

The surprises are what everyone looks forward to, the "Cinderella stories." They happen every year, but not even the most respected NCAA prognosticators can be sure who will come away with a few upsets in the tournament.

What was the biggest surprise of the tournament? The answers to that question were as diverse as the 64 teams making up the tourney itself.

"I was surprised by how much UCLA (University of California in Los Angeles) beat Maryland by, (35 points) but not by Stanford losing. They don't play nearly a hard enough schedule. If you play teams like Hofstra all year, you're obviously going to have a good record going in," said Mark Hall, an assistant varsity coach of basketball, track and field, and football."

Ron Ford, varsity basketball coach at CHS said the biggest surprise took place before the tournament began.

"I really didn't think Stanford or Arizona deserved number one seeds. I thought Temple deserved it, and Cincinnati did, despite losing Kenyon Martin."

These two obviously have been following college basketball all season long. However, some do not have the time to read up on the statistics of the All-Americans. For example, how does one of lesser knowledge of the NCAA go about answering a question such as, 'Who is Kenyon Martin?'

The answers from around Cohasset:

Joe Bouchard, history teacher at Cohasset High School said, "Kenyon Martin, hmmm, I've heard the name, can I use one of my lifelines?"

Hmmm. Anybody else?

Deb Beal, Cohasset High School physical education teacher and girls varsity soccer coach seemed pretty confident of her knowledge of college hoops this year. Her response: "Kenyon Martin is that Cincinnati guy who broke his leg."

Warmer....

It was Curtis Collins, principal of the Middle-High School who came closest to the intended answer. "Kenyon Martin is the fine young basketball player from Cincinnati who busted his leg."

Kenyon Martin was a center from the University of Cincinnati, the man who many thought would lead his team to a national championship, but could not after sustaining an ankle injury.

After Martin's injury ended the Bearcats' dreams of a trip to the Final Four, the field was left even more wide open for a champion than

Remembering that championship season

By Mark G. DeGiacomo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It has been several months since the last pitch of the summer All-Star season was thrown at Barnes Field on North Main Street. Walking by the field today, with the first day of spring so close at hand, it isn't too hard to imagine the sights and sounds of baseball.

Although it won't make opening day come any faster, I thought now might be a good time to tell you the story of last year's 9-year-old All-Star team and their perfect season.

Once the 13-player roster was determined by the coaching staff, Bob Morgan, Curt Mills, Bill Grimm and I knew we had a good team. After all we had coached these boys since they were five years old.

However, we were also aware of the fact that history was not on our side. Summer travel teams from small Cohasset rarely have been able to stack up well against perennial baseball powerhouses like Braintree and Whitman. Yet this team seemed special. We were curious to see what they could do.

After we warned the boys about the level of competition they would be facing during the season, they took to the field July 8 for their first contest, a home game against Whitman. The boys played well, but with two innings left to play, they trailed 5-2. Although they had not been able to do much against Whitman's pitcher, the boys kept encouraging each other and refused to quit.

In the bottom of the fifth inning of the six-inning game, a determined Cameron Cunningham came up to bat with the bases loaded. The fans and his teammates cheered him on. Cameron did not disappoint. His bases-clearing triple tied the game at five. Pitcher Sam DeGiacomo held Whitman scoreless in the top of the sixth.

In the bottom of the sixth, Kyle Pinkus stepped up to the plate with two men on base and doubled in the game-winning run. The boys were ecstatic. They had defeated a team from another town. Little did we know then that our come-from-behind, one-run victory in our season opener was the closest the boys would come to losing a game for the rest of the season.

After the Whitman victory the season took off. Behind the pitching of Chris Mills they crushed Milton (17-7). With the help of a grand slam by David Snowdale, they made easy work of Braintree (17-5) followed by a hammering of the Rockland "B" team (27-5) featuring four hit games by Brian Hill and David Snowdale.

They played better and better as the season progressed. In fact, they were too good. On several occasions, in order not to embarrass the other team, our coaches would make a player stop at first after hitting what would have been an easy double, or stop at third even though he could have walked to home plate.

When the opposing pitcher was having a hard time getting the ball over the plate, we often ordered our players not to walk but to "swing at anything." Still, the margins of victory were at times embarrassing.

In the fifth game of the season Mike Grimm and Cody Morgan powered Cohasset's finest past Braintree (12-3). Sharon threw in the towel after just five innings (20-8), and Mike Grimm pitched three shutout innings against Avon to lead the team to victory (20-8).

The Cohasset fans loved it. Parents, siblings, aunts, uncles, grandparents and friends flocked to the games in larger and larger numbers. Our home games were packed and at away games our fans often outnumbered the fans for the home team.

The games became a social event for families to get together and admire how these 9-year-olds played baseball. Proving once again that although youth sport is for the youth, it's OK for parents to have fun too.

With their record standing at 7-0, the All-Stars met perhaps their biggest challenge of the season, the undefeated Rockland "A" team. With four of our players unavailable to play, Cliff Musto was called up to help the team. The coaches told the players not to be disappointed if their undefeated season came to an end.

The Rockland "A" team was very good. They listened, nodded their heads and assured us we had nothing to worry about. In the first inning the Cohasset nine jumped out to a 3-0 lead and never looked back. They played flawless baseball behind the Cohasset has three girls teams in the league: sixth grade, seventh grade and eighth grade.

Sixth grade girls win OCL championship

The Cohasset sixth grade girls traveling team won the Old Colony League Championship last weekend in Weymouth in an exciting tournament.

It was the first time a Cohasset team had won a basketball tournament in grades six to eight. Cohasset, seeded fourth in the tournament, easily defeated fifth seeded Bridgewater in a first round matchup.

The following week they had to play undefeated Braintree in a second round duel in order to make it to the championship game. Playing without starting point guard Chelsea Grossman, who broke her wrist at practice, chances looked grim. Braintree plays with a tough half-court trap that led to Cohasset's loss to them in the regular season.

At practice, coaches Ross Lieb-Lappen, Ed Lappen, and Jeff Grossman designed some plays that hopefully would beat it. The team practiced the plays all week and by the weekend played their most inspired basketball of the season, leading to Cohasset's win of 18-16.

Cohasset started strong and made the overconfident Braintree team a little worried. They responded with a 6-0 run. Cohasset came back however. Mia Lieb-Lappen and Aly Belz, the two Cohasset guards, were able to handle the Braintree trap defense.

The team's strategy of getting the ball in to the front court was successful. They were able to pass through the trap and get the ball to their center Lisa Musto, who both drove to the basket and passed off to forwards Kaitlin James and Lisa Spirito.

Both of the forwards took it strong to the hole and either drew the foul, or scored the bucket. This brought the score up to 13-7 in favor of Cohasset.

Earlier in the month, Bell competed in the iSunshine Invitationali in Ft. Lauderdale against 13 & unders, Florida's best, and some of the country's best divers, she finished a respectable 19th on 3-meter (211.30) and 21st on 1-meter (190.65).

Bell's forte is her igreat work ethic. She has fire in her belly and has been working real hard,i according to RipTide coach Jim Kelly.

iKelsey has learned a lot of new dives in a short period of time. She has a back 1 somersault with 1 1/2 twists, a back 1 1/2 sommy, and all of her dives from 3-mtr are new. As an 11 & under diver, she has already opened some eyes,i said Kelly.

Bell is competing this weekend at Wesleyan University in the USD Jr. Olympic Regional Championships, hoping to qualify for Nationals.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

PARLOR TALK

During the 17th century and the early part of the 18th century, the parlor in colonial homes reflected the economic status of the household and was typically, the nicest room in the house. Today, anyone wishing to decorate his or her home in the colonial style may be surprised to learn that colonists preferred strong colors (such as yellow and blue) rather than the dull muted shades often associated with the period. As for drapery elements, they were often nailed directly to the molding or window frame. Other than mounted needlework, framed portraits were generally the only pictures on the walls. In time, Spartan simplicity gave way to comfort in the form of carpets, wallpaper, and upholstered furniture.

The Designing Woman can help you combine contemporary sensibilities and old-world charm. We work with you to remove potential confusion and create an environment that reflects your personal identity and individual tastes. Often, we can change the placement of your existing furniture and add accessories to improve the focal point and mood of the room. Welcome the spring season with newly remodeled rooms. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

HINT: Popular at the turn of the 18 th century, high chests became the showiest piece of furniture in American homes.

Remembering that championship season

combined pitching effort of Brian Hill and Tommy Chase. They made all of the plays in the field, but the play I remember the most is the catch made by Cody Morgan, the greatest catch I have ever seen in Little League baseball.

It was the fourth inning and Cody had just caught a routine fly ball off the bat of Rockland's first batter. Rockland's next batter belted a waist-high shot between second and third. When I saw how hard the ball was hit, I knew it was headed to right field for a base hit. Second baseman Cody Morgan had other ideas. With no time to run, he leapt to his left and then with his glove extended as far as possible and his body completely parallel to the ground, he made the catch!

Even the hard-nosed Rockland coach, who knew his undefeated season was slipping away, had to stand up and cheer. The final score was 11-2. The only remaining undefeated team left the field feeling pretty good about themselves.

There was no letup after the big Rockland victory. Chris Rose's three hits and incredible, over the shoulder catch led Cohasset to victory over Whitman (16-4); Mike Grimm's three hits helped power them past Avon (14-5).

The Rockland "B" team proved no match against the pitching of Chris Mills, Ryan Crough and Kyle Pinkus and home runs by Pat Doonan, Sam DeGiacomo, Brian Hill and Justin Hollis. Milton didn't even bother showing up and forfeited the game; and Justin Hollis put on a hitting clinic against Sharon (11-1) to complete the undefeated regular season.

Having finished in first place, the Cohasset All-Stars received a bye in the first round of the playoffs. They would only have to win one semifinal game against Sharon to play for the championship. The boys had been waiting for this all season. An undefeated season was great but they wanted a championship.

Brian Hill dominated on the mound. After four innings he had struck out seven and allowed no runs. Meanwhile Cohasset scored six times. But as we entered the last two innings, it was still a close game. One mistake could open the flood gates and the dream of an undefeated championship season would be lost.

Unfortunately for Sharon, Cohasset had no intention of making a mistake. Sharon's big chance came in the fifth inning. With a man on second and two outs, the Sharon batter lined a hit down the right field line. The Sharon third-base coach waived the runner home, a big mistake. Right fielder Cameron Cunningham picked up the ball and threw a strike to first baseman Chris Rose, who turned and made a perfect throw to catcher Pat Doonan, who tagged the sliding runner out. The final score was 6-0. Cohasset was going to the championship game.

I arrived at the field early the day of the championship game against Braintree and paced outside the fence of the empty field waiting for our team to arrive. The Braintree team arrived and started to warm up. They sure looked better than I remembered.

More pacing. I kept looking down the long street that led to the field. Then I saw it, a caravan of 10 cars with streamers waving from every antenna and car door handle. The sound of the song "All Star" seemed to be coming from every radio.

The Hill's car backed in against the fence so that all could see the banner that was taped to the back of the car which read "Refuse to Lose." The players poured out of the cars carrying their bat bags and looking very determined. I actually heard one of them turn to a teammate and say "Let's get this done!"

The first pitch of the game was lined by the Braintree batter into right field. It looked like a solid hit until Justin Hollis ran in and made a difficult catch look easy. You could almost feel Braintree's confidence deflate. After two innings, Cohasset led 3-1. Then Cohasset's hitting and perfect defense started to click in.

Every time Braintree started to put a rally together, they were stopped cold by plays made in the field. An alert Ryan Crough tagged a runner out at third base when the runner wandered off the bag. Pat Doonan flipped off his catcher's mask to catch a fly ball like a pro between home and the mound. On a ball that was hit up the middle with a man on first and Braintree's coach yelling "It's through! It's through!" Sam DeGiacomo dived to his right, grabbed the hard grounder and tagged second for the force out.

With one out and a man on first and third, first baseman Chris Rose grabbed a line drive and tagged out the Braintree runner before he could get back to first for an inning-ending unassisted double play. The hitting came alive in the third and fifth innings, when the boys scored a total of 10 runs.

When complete game winner Tommy Chase caught a fly ball for the last out of the game we all cheered and smiled. The final score was 15-2. They had done it. Even though the early evening air had turned cool, when the boys dumped a cooler of ice water on me, it felt…good.

There is an old wise saying in youth sports that goes something like this: It doesn't matter if you win or lose, it's how you play the game. You may be surprised to learn that when I think back to last year's 9-year-old All-Star season, I don't think about the fact that we were undefeated, or that we won the championship. For me, it was "the way they played the game" that made it a perfect season.

Madness takes over Cohasset

before. This raised the question of who will step up and win the championship?

Ford again had the analysis, "I have always been a Duke fan, I have said they would win it from the beginning."

But coach Ford, a top-ranked team usually has trouble winning the whole thing.

"That just shows how tough it is to win the tourney. (Side note: 36 hours after saying this, Duke was ousted by number five seed Florida, 87-78)

"As far as the championship, there are five programs, UCLA, UNC (University of North Carolina), Kentucky, Kansas, and Indiana, who have an inherent advantage come tournament time due to their history." (Another side note: Only one of these teams, North Carolina, made it as far as the fourth round of the tournament known as the Elite Eight.)

Who else has picks for this years victor's

Bouchard: "Michigan State, I watched them play during the season, and they have a lot of depth."

Collins agreed:

"Michigan State, but I have no good reason. I have been out of the loop this year following college basketball."

Beal had a different team in mind, but not necessarily for their talent.

"Temple, I have always been an Atlantic 10 fan," said Beal. "I went to URI (University of Rhode Island) and I remember watching some great games between those two. Plus [68 year old Temple coach] John Chaney has never won a championship."

At the start of every tournament, you think there is no way your favorite team can lose. But the fact of the matter is 12 of the first 48 games played in the tournament were upsets, a higher seed beating a lower one. These upsets do not include last second losses by heavy underdogs such as Butler, Dayton and St. Bonaventure.

Half of the teams remaining in the Sweet Sixteen Round had seeds of six or higher (16 being the worst, one being the best).

Only one number one seed and one number two seed (Michigan State and Iowa State respectively) remained in the Elite Eight.

From the excitement of just making tournament in the opening round, to the uncontrollable atmosphere of the Final Four, this 18 day span truly defines March Madness.

Sixth grade girls win OCL championship

Vanessa Plante and Katrina Reardon all were instrumental in coming off the bench. On defense, Emily Savage came in and shut down Braintree's star center and grabbed some clutch rebounds.

At the end of the game, Reardon came in and scored the winning shot. Emma Weston entered the game at whatever position coaches Lappen and Grossman put her in without a complaint.

Weston and Plante both were able to show the coaches a good strategy of moving the ball quickly up the court. This led to several great breakaways. As halftime approached, Braintree scored a buzzer beater making the score 13-12.

The second half of this game was dead even. Cohasset played with tenacious defense, allowing Braintree only three points in the whole second half. As the end approached, Cohasset was up 18-14.

Braintree became nervous and started to press with two minutes remaining. Coach Lieb-Lappen quickly designed a press break which Cohasset guards Belz and Lieb-Lappen executed perfectly. Despite that desperate attempt by Braintree, Cohasset prevailed and moved on to the finals.

After waiting nearly four hours, Cohasset came back to Weymouth to play sixth seeded Abington in the championship game. Right from the start, this was not a close game. Cohasset was much too strong for Abington.

They were able to get the ball up the court no problem this time, setting up the forwards James and Spirito who combined for 17 amazing points, most off assists from Belz.

Lieb-Lappen, Reardon, Savage, Musto and Weston all had no problem scoring either. The game plan was played perfectly as Cohasset rolled to an easy victory 30-12, becoming the Old Colony League champions!

Mendel Road residents to get sewer hookup

Voters give priority to condo complex before vacant lots

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The septic difficulties which have cost five Cohasset families tens of thousands of dollars appear to be over.

Town meeting voted Saturday to hook up the five Olde Farm Hill condominiums on Mendel Road to the town sewer before vacant lots in the Central Sewer District.

The sewer commission has previously said available capacity in the Central District should be reserved for buildable vacant lots.

A window of opportunity opened for Mendel Road residents before town meeting, however, when sewer commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said the commission would allow the Olde Farm Hill condos to hook up before vacant lots if town meeting gave priority to the five condos.

Voters agreed to add the five condos on Mendel Road to the Central Sewer District at last December's special town meeting, but the vote was conditional on a sewer commission determination of adequate capacity for the condos.

Following the special town meeting vote, the sewer commission held to its judgement of inadequate capacity to serve the condos on Mendel Road.

"Our plan has always been to stay within the confines of the district," Vanderweil said Saturday. "Believe it or not, the sewer commission does not have a diabolical plot against the people on Mendel Road. We felt we had an ethical responsibility to hook up the vacant lots. Everyone in a sewer district should be able to reasonably assume capacity."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the sewer commission should have honored the spirit of the special town meeting vote to hook up the Mendel Road condos before vacant lots.

"It's the feeling of the selectmen that existing homes should be connected before vacant lots," McMorris said. "It was our hope the sewer commission would have recognized the special town meeting vote."

David Kellem, the Hull attorney representing the families on Mendel Road, said town meeting voters did not need to choose between the five Mendel Road condos and the 42 vacant lots in the Central Sewer District designated as buildable. Kellem said he went to all 42 of the lots and found many of them could not be built upon.

> "We don't want to make this a contest between us and the vacant lots. All we want to do is put an end to this."
> Mendel Road resident Susan Kent

"I can tell you that 13 of the lots are definitely not buildable," Kellem said. "There are five lots owned by the town near the corner of Pond Street and Route 3A and a stream which feeds Lily Pond runs right through those lots. Another 6500 square-foot lot is literally a mountain of ledge. You cannot build on these lots, either physically or by state law."

While Vanderweil said a moratorium would be placed on sewer connections for vacant lots if the condos on Mendel Road were hooked up, he added the 10 to15 lot owners who have already applied for connections would be connected as promised.

Mendel Road resident Susan Kent said she and the other condominium owners are not looking for sewer connections at the expense of vacant lot owners.

"We don't want to make this a contest between us and the vacant lots," said an impassioned Kent. "Everybody knows our issue. Five of these vacant lots are owned by the town of Cohasset. We're not looking to take anyone's retirement. All we want to do is put an end to this."

The town agreed to put an end to the Mendel Road septic nightmare, which has cost the five families upwards of $65,000 in pumping fees, consultants, legal fees, new pipes, and a French drain for groundwater runoff that hasn't solved the problem since the condominium complex's second septic system failed two years ago.

As a result of the majority vote to connect the Mendel Road condos before vacant lots and the two-thirds majority vote allowing selectmen to acquire an easement for a sewer pipe to serve the properties, Mendel Road residents can expect to connect to the town sewer in June.

Mendel Road residents have said they will pay for any eminent domain takings which may be necessary for placement of the sewer pipe.

change for school renovation projects. Spofford said this may be the last time Cohasset could get 60 percent reimbursement to fix the problems at Deer Hill and the middle-high school.

"The school funding program is changing, and it's going in the opposite direction," he said. "This is the last year it's going to be this way. The state received 106 applications this year, which is the largest pool of applicants ever. Communities know things are going to change."

Selectmen, the advisory committee, and the capital budget committee all recommended approval of the school renovation article to town meeting voters. Advisory committee member Daniel Evans said the disrepair of both schools illustrates the need for renovations.

"The reason to do this is not because we need first-class buildings," Evans said. "We have leaking roofs and windows, and the electrical systems are inadequate. This is about providing buildings we'd be comfortable having our children go to school in. It's cheaper to go with full-scale renovations because of the reimbursement."

Planning board member Robert Sturdy, a candidate for selectman, disputed the need for such an extensive renovation project.

"We are, in my opinion, being manipulated," Sturdy said. "We were told we needed $10 million for Osgood and before the paint is even dry, we're told we need another $41.8 million for the junior-senior high school. Bricks, concrete, and linoleum floors will not educate your children. Only the staff does."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the school committee eliminated some of the bells and whistles suggested by residents and focused on building schools which will meet the needs of Cohasset's students for the foreseeable future.

"Everyone in the town knows these schools need a substantial amount of work," DeGiacomo said. "Many options were looked into at the commencement of this project and were deemed too costly. We rejected an additional classroom at the Deer Hill, an indoor pool and an indoor track. These are not palaces we're proposing today. They're safe, efficient buildings for the education of our children which meet the needs of increased enrollment."

If voters approve an override for the project, construction on the schools is slated to begin within a year.

"Our intent is to bid the project sometime in the fall, and our goal is to be digging this time next year," Spofford said.

Residents to pay as they throw

Town meeting approves new trash disposal system

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For proponents of the pay-as-you-throw trash disposal system, the third time was the charm.

Town meeting voted Saturday to allow selectmen to institute the program, after two failed attempts in previous years. In 1997, an article was withdrawn prior to town meeting to better educate the public. An article seeking to institute the program did make it to the 1998 annual town meeting floor, but was defeated by a vote of 72-54.

The winds of public opinion have changed in the two years leading to this year's town meeting, however, as the majority vote in favor of the program did not even require a hand count.

Selectman and recycling committee member Merle Brown, who has advocated the virtues of pay-as-you-throw for the last three years, said selectmen will likely wait a year before instituting the program.

"We don't really want to start right away," Brown said Monday night. "We want to get a grant from the state to help pay for the bags for the first year, and it would be hard to get the bags by July 1. Also, we want to have time to educate the people and figure out what the structure of the costs will be. The sticker fee next year will be $100, which pays for half of the RTF. I certainly don't want a $100 dollar fee with pay-as-you-throw. We need to sit down with [Town Accountant] Mike Buckley and work out some kind of formula."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the structure of the program will likely be similar to that used in Scituate, where he resides.

"The way it works in Scituate is you pay a $50 sticker fee and you get 50 bags," Haddad said. "There would be a reduction in the sticker fee as in Scituate. Once you use all 50 bags, it's a dollar for each additional bag."

The cost of sending trash to the SEMASS waste-to-energy plant in Rochester has increased over the past couple of years to the current rate of $90 per ton.

> "You can see it does work. People buy differently. Recycling goes up, and trash goes down."
> Selectman Merle Brown

Brown and fellow selectman Thomas Callahan provided examples to other voters of towns in which the pay-as-you-throw system has resulted in less tonnage being shipped out, thereby providing a lower trash disposal cost for those towns.

"The town of Merrimac started in March 1998, and went from 0.5 tons per capita to 0.15 tons per capita."

Brown said. Needham has reduced trash from 0.39 tons per capita to 0.23 tons per capita since June 1998. "You can see it does work. People buy differently. Recycling goes up, and trash goes down."

Some of the opposition to pay-as-you-throw in previous years came from senior citizens, most of whom have grown children and have only a one or two-person household.

With only one or two people disposing of trash, a household could need two weeks to use a 30-gallon trash bag. Edward Woods, 231 Jerusalem Rd., expressed the same sentiment Saturday morning.

"I think this buck-a-bag thing is very difficult on some of us," Woods said. "It takes a while to fill up a bag. I'm in favor of taking trash up there [to the RTF] as trash occurs. If our house is going to be a staging area for our dump, it's going to be hard on those of us with strong noses."

Brown said at least one additional bag size, a 15-gallon bag, would be available for those with smaller households.

On the other end of the trash disposal spectrum from small households are large families with three or four children living at home. Selectman Diane Sullivan has said previously the pay-as-you-throw system may be discriminatory because larger families who dispose of more bags of trash for face a greater brunt of RTF costs.

Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Rd., said those families who throw out three or four bags of trash a week should pay more for trash disposal than a small household which thrown out one bag a week.

"Trash should be treated like any other utility," Jenkins said. "There's a user fee, and then you pay based on your usage."

Brown said he is confident pay-as-you-throw will increase recycling and reduce the cost of trash disposal for the town' taxpayers.

"We have a 32 percent recycling rate and I think we can get up to 50 or 55 percent with pay-as-you-throw while also reducing the amount of trash we send to SEMASS at $90 a ton. It's not something new, and it does work. These days, you can't just throw your trash over a cliff and forget it."

Solid waste facilities nixed on 3A

close to the needed two-thirds majority.

A hush came over the town meeting floor as election workers and Marlette tabulated the votes. After a couple of minutes, Marlette said the article was indeed adopted by a vote of 151 to 68.

McNabb, a member of the anti-landfill citizen group SAFE [Stop Any Further Expansion], said the purpose of the zoning change was to prevent solid waste facilities in the area.

"Cohasset has had a long, running nightmare with solid waste not produced in this town," McNabb said. "Vote for this article and shut the door on adverse uses such as solid waste."

CHL owner Paul Barry told town meeting voters they should reject the article as they have previous efforts spearheaded by McNabb to rezone the district in which CHL lies.

Voters last turned down a proposed zoning change of the district at the Dec. 1999 special town meeting.

"This has been in front of town meeting three times," Barry said. "I guess I'm the villain in all this. This article is to get rid of me, but changing the zoning is not going to get Paul Barry alone. You'd be hurting a lot of other people to get Paul Barry."

Some residents expressed concern about the elimination of manufacturing uses in the proposed technology business district. Manufacturing must be prohibited in order to change from an industrial district to a non-industrial district.

Selectman Thomas Callahan said manufacturing firms are unlikely to return to Cohasset regardless on any zoning change.

"Much like the school article we voted on today, we should be trying to look forward," Callahan said. "We're not an industrial center, and we're not going to be one."

Robert Sturdy, one of five planning board members unanimously opposed to the zoning change, said zoning changes should not be the answer to the town's legal battles with CHL.

"The planning board takes the position that those who own property can have security that zoning bylaws will allow it to remain similar in perpetuity," Sturdy said. "The town should solve the problem with the landfill by going through a direct route."

Negotiations between CHL and the town's CHL negotiating committee have been ongoing since the landfill closed in 1998. CHL negotiating committee chairman Kevin Ulmer said the zoning change is needed to protect the town because the state Department of Environmental Protection has failed to adequately monitor activities at CHL.

"The reason we have to do this through zoning bylaws is because DEP is asleep at the switch," Ulmer said. "Cohasset Heights violated its slope standards year after year. DEP should have been looking out for us, and it didn't."

Barry's son-in-law and business associate Robert Schwandt said the proposed zoning change was yet another attempt to take down CHL.

"The overriding statement I'm hearing is we don't like state statutes, we don't like landfilling, we don't like the DEP, and we don't like Paul Barry," Schwandt said. "This is essentially the same proposal as before. The proponents readily admit this article is aimed at one property owner and one use."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the change to a technology business district was designed better than previous proposals and would solve the issues lingering between the town and CHL.

"This is probably one of the most important articles to the town's future," McMorris said. "The only way we will be able to protect the town's interest is through this article. Whatever potential exists for development is far outweighed by the negative effects of a landfill."

Library set for old Osgood school

The 15,000 square-foot library is to include a large reading room, a children's room with low bookstacks and computers, built-in wiring for Internet usage, and two meeting rooms.

Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees, showed town meeting voters renderings of the architectural plans for the proposed library, which include a rotunda with a built-in skylight near the lobby and a restored cupola.

Towle said operational costs are not likely to increase, because the current level of staffing at the Pratt library should be adequate for the new library as well.

Examining democracy

Jennifer Chastain and Ben Peterson students at Cohasset High School recently took part in the Presidential Classroom Media and Democracy program in Washington, DC, from Feb. 26 to March 4.

They joined nearly 250 student leaders from 39 states and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The students spent a week investigating the relationship between democracy and the "fourth estate" of the press in Washington. They observed the American political process at seminars led by The Washington Times vice president and general manager Dick Amberg; Scripps Howard News Service vice president Dan Thomasson; State Department assistant secretary and spokesman James Rubin; and Senator Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.). Highlights for the week included workshops led by the Newseum on media ethics and photo ethics, and a look at "The Supreme Court and the First Amendment" led by General William Suter, Supreme Court Clerk of the Court. The group also enjoyed visits to foreign embassies, a private tour of the White House and a performance by the political satire troupe, the Capitol Steps.

For more information, call Presidential Classroom at 1-800-441-6533; or visit www.presidentialclassroom.org.

Deer Hill participates in Public Health Week

The Massachusetts Public Health Association sponsored a poster contest for fifth grade students throughout the state. The posters show a picture that depicts the completion of one of the following three statements:

- I protect myself from injury when I.....
- My family stays healthy by.....
- My community protects our environment when we.....

One poster was chosen from those students participating in the contest as Cohasset's entry in the statewide contest. Robin R. Earle, shown here receiving his first place certificate from Joe Godzik, Cohasset Board of Health Agent, submitted the winning poster from the Deer Hill School. His poster will be among those judged by a statewide panel during Public Health Week, April 3-7 at the Massachusetts Public Health Association in Boston. The contest winners will win monetary prizes for their schools and classes and their posters will be on display at the American Public Health Association meeting in Boston at the Hynes Convention Center in November 2000.

Robin's poster included a variety of safety tips such as "don't smoke," "stop at red lights," "wear seatbelts," "check your brakes," "wear helmets," and information on fire prevention.

Also shown in the picture are the honorable mention winners: Shalea Daly, Lindsay Durkin, Charles W. Miller, Caitlin Hurley and Kristen Dooley, and Judy Fitzsimmons, public health nurse of Cohasset; Motoko Deane, President of the Social Service League of Cohasset who co-sponsor the contest with the Cohasset Board of Health; Karen Murphy, Deer Hill School nurse; and Paul Callahan, Deer Hill School principal. Henderson receives scholarship at Milton

The Milton Academy Science Department has awarded the $3,500 Roger Hallowell Scholarship to Kate Henderson of Cohasset. This scholarship is awarded to one Milton Academy student to attend "Sea Education" this summer.

An academically rigorous marine biology program, the Sea Education Association (SEA) and Shoals Marine Laboratory offer a unique opportunity to experience life on an island off the coast of Maine and on board a sailing vessel, studying oceanic and coastal marine environments. The program exposes students to the science of the sea through hands-on participation, while earning four undergraduate college credits from Cornell University. During the 18-day course, eight days will be spent on Appledore Island in the Gulf of Maine, working in Cornell University's Marine Biology Laboratories, and the remaining 10 days at sea. The 125-foot schooner "Westward" will sail as far as George's Banks to Cape Cod.

Kate is a junior at Milton Academy and a three-year member of the varsity soccer, volleyball and sailing teams. She is a three-year member of the Milton Academy orchestra and was recently voted captain of next year's varsity volleyball team. Kate is the daughter of Jane and David Henderson.

OBITUARIES

Anne Phippen

Anne P. Phippen, 77, of Hull, formerly of Cohasset and Marblehead Neck, died after a long illness.

Mrs. Phippen, a lawyer by training, was director of the Hull Public Library from 1963 to 1987 and brought her intelligence, inquisitiveness, motivational and research skills to her second profession.

Dan Johnson, present director of the Hull Public Library, said Mrs. Phippen took the Hull Library from a small summer library to an up-to-date modern facility by doubling the collection, by providing reference services and by making the library a community center.

Johnson added that Mrs. Phippen's improvements increased the use of the library's facilities and collections. Mrs. Phippen's dream was to increase the size of the library. This was accomplished in 1987 after her retirement. However, Anne Phippen laid the ground work for the expansion of the Hull Public Library in her 24 years of service.

For her dedicated service and innovations, the board of trustees named a room in honor of Anne Phippen, Johnson said.

She was one of the few women who graduated from George Washington Law School and served as editor of the Law Review. In December 1945, she married Navy Lt. Commander Robert J. Phippen of Salem and Oyster Harbour. After his service discharge, he graduated from Boston University Law School. They both passed the Massachusetts Bar and later Anne received her master's degree in corporation taxation from Boston University. Robert J. Phippen died in 1984.

Mrs. Phippen leaves four daughters, Cicely Marks of Silver Spring, Md., Barbara Cutler of Seattle, Wash., Roberta Collier of

Anne P. Phippen

Washington, D.C., and Susan Buxbaum of Towson, Md.; two sons, Walter Phippen of Hull and Professor David Phippen of Bothell, Wash., eight grandchildren; a brother, also a lawyer, Frederick Peterson of Ft. Worth, Texas; and two sisters, Patricia Rissler of Lenexa, Kan., and Polly Logan of Cohassett.

Services and interment are private.

Arrangements were by the Richardson-Gaffey Funeral Home of Scituate.

Memorial contributions in lieu of flowers, may be made to Hull Library.

Sally Barnard Wheeler

Sally Barnard Wheeler, 82, of Cohasset, a homemaker, died March 26 in Southwood at Norwell after a brief illness.

Mrs. Wheeler was a 33-year choir member at First Parish Church where she also earned a Distinguished Service Award.

Born and raised in Norwell, she graduated from Derby Academy in 1936 and from Sarah Lawrence College in 1940. She was a 47-year resident of Cohasset.

She lived with insulin diabetes for 70 years.

She leaves her husband, Richard P. Wheeler; a son, Christopher B. Wheeler of Norwell; a daughter, Julie A. Child of Holbrook, and four grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held at a later date. Interment will be private in Newton Cemetery.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Joslin Diabetes Center, 1 Joslin Place, Boston 02215 or to the First Parish Music Fund, 23 No. Main St., Cohasset 02025.

Joseph S. Conroy

Joseph S. Conroy, 74, lifelong resident of Cohasset, died March 22 at Olympus Specialty Hospital in Braintree after a brief illness.

Mr. Conroy was son of the late Frank and Louise (Grassie) Conroy. He graduated from Cohasset High School.

He was employed as an automobile repair mechanic for 45 years and worked for Fiori Exxon Service Center in Cohasset.

He was in the Coast Guard in World War II and also served in the Navy Reserve at the former Weymouth Air Base.

Mr. Conroy leaves his wife, Mary (Leahy) Conroy and many cousins including Helen Beal of Scituate and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset Center. The Rev. Mulverhill officiated at the Mass. Interment was private in Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Minors arrested over weekend

Cohasset police arrested seven minors over the weekend in three separate incidents.

Responding to a disturbance call at 4:35 p.m. Friday, police arrested Sean O'Hara, 17, of 354 N. Main Street and charged him with carrying a dangerous weapon.

"It was a neighborhood disturbance and when the officer arrived, he noticed the youth tried to hide something in his hands," Sgt. Robert Jackson said. "He then tried to deposit it inside the house."

Further investigation revealed a double-edged knife, Jackson said.

At about 1 a.m. on Saturday, police responded to a report of a disturbance and underage drinking off Aaron River Road near the reservoir. Police discovered a group of about 20 youths around a campfire. The youths ran off when the police arrived. One officer remained behind while two others responded to an alarm which later turned out to be a hoax. The following Scituate youths where arrested when they returned for their beer and were charged with minor transporting an alcoholic beverage: Deborah A. Page, 17, of Tichnor Place; Kimberly R. Bartlett, 18, of Clapp Road; Andrea M. Trigo, 18, of Tanglewood Road; Elizabeth A. Molinari, 19, of Stenbeck Place; and Christopher J. Flynn, 17, of Hatherly Road.

At 10:25 p.m., Saturday, police arrested Michael R. Goff, 19, of 472 Beechwood St., and charged him with illegal possession of a class C substance (hallucinogenic mushroom). In that incident police responded to a report of a disturbance at the end of Doane Street near the entrance to Wompatuck State Park. The officer entered the park on foot and observed a group of youths arguing. He patted down Goff and discovered a small quantity of the hallucinogenic. All the youths were arraigned in Quincy District Court on Monday, Jackson said.

Hopping for MDA

Kids raise $1118 for Muscular Dystrophy

As part of a unit on disability awareness, the children in the KEDS Program, as well as their teacher, Liz Aran, participated in a hop-a-thon earlier this month to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy Association. The children have been learning about different handicaps and disabilities including deafness, blindness, and muscular dystrophy through a number of activities. They were taught about Braille, seeing eye dogs, sign language and how to get from place to place using crutches, a walker and a wheelchair.

A parent packet was sent home a couple of weeks before the hop explaining what the children would be learning about, how they could help to prepare and educate and a pledge sheet with directions. A representative from the MDA came to one classroom March 14 and 15. She taught the children about how the body works and read a story about how we are all different on the outside, and that we need to be accepting of one another. She told them about the disease and explained that they would be using their healthy muscles to help children whose muscles were not as healthy and strong. She introduced a Barbie doll in a wheelchair, that the kids thought was really "cool."

The children were broken up into groups, and each child was given two minutes to hop on one foot. The teacher in each group counted the number of hops, while the others in the group cheered him or her on for encouragement. Each child was then presented with a certificate of participation, stating the number of hops they were able to complete.

Spring baskets

The Cohasset High School music department is holding a fund raiser to raise money for a trip in May. The "Spring Baskets" contain blueberry muffins, chocolate chip and sugar cookies, and assorted candy and come in two sizes, individual and family. The individual basket costs $14 and is for one person. The family basket costs $25 and is for three to four people. Baskets can be delivered for $1 per basket. Students will deliver to Cohasset, Hingham, and Scituate, but orders will be accepted from anywhere as long as they will be picked up. If you would like to order baskets, call 383-9044 and ask for Liz or Julie.

You can also pick up order forms in the Cohasset High School, Deer Hill School, and Osgood School main offices. Orders will be accepted through Thursday, April 6. Pick up and delivery will be on Saturday, April 8, from 1 to 4 p.m.

ASP yard sale

This spring cleanup can help others this year when donating unwanted furniture, toys, sports equipment, kitchen goods, art work, boats, books, knick-knacks, and other "treasures" to the Appalachia Service Project's (ASP) annual yard sale. The yard sale is scheduled form 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, April 8, at the Second Congregational Church.

Donated items may be dropped off at the church anytime after April 3. Pickups for larger items may be arranged.

All proceeds will benefit the 2000 Appalachia Service Project. The Cohasset ASP is a group of local high school students, college students and adult volunteers, who travel annually to the Appalachia Mountain region to participate in the Appalachia Service Project, Inc. a national home repair ministry. In the past 31 years, more than 125,000 volunteers have repaired more than 9,000 homes in Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Led by the Rev. Gary and Judy Ritts of the Second Congregational Church, this ecumenical group of 100 teenagers plus 40 adult advisors will make its 13th annual pilgrimage on June 24 to July 2. The group will travel to Kentucky and join others from all over the United States in a week of service to provide warmer, drier and safer housing for our neighbors in Appalachia.

Shipbuilding talk

The topic of Cohasset Historical Society's spring dinner is "The History of the North River and its Shipbuilding," directed by Bill Stanton of the North River Association.

It is April 30 at Kimball's By The Sea. Cash bar is 5 p.m., dinner at 6 p.m.

Reservations are required.

Tickets are $35 for non-members and $30 for members.

Call 781-383-1434. Also 781-383-0766 John Hvorka, president.

Post prom party

The Cohasset Post Prom Committee is planning its third annual "After the Prom All-Night Party" to be held at Cohasset High School Thursday, June 1.

This party is intended to serve several purposes. Initially, to present as a gift to graduating seniors a "going away party" in appreciation of their hard work and accomplishments. Secondly, to provide a drug- and alcohol-free party where they can relax, have fun, and share a last evening as a group. Thirdly, to provide a vehicle whereby the entire community, as a whole family, can share in the celebration of its young people.

In order to help defray the costs of this worthwhile event, monetary donations are needed. Other donations of gifts for prizes and raffle items will also be greatly appreciated. Call Linda Chastain at 383-3047 or Lisa Kupsc at 383-6826 for more information. All contributions can be sent to The Cohasset Post Prom Party, 72 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset 02025.

John and Ann Murphy of Hingham have a lot to SMILE about with the success of their humor workshops, which they conduct all over the United States.

Hingham couple helps people SMILE

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

John Murphy, of Hingham, says one of the reasons he survived cancer and a heart attack is because he has a great sense of humor.

That's why he and his wife Ann are offering local people the chance to identify their own senses of humor through a program called the Subjective Multidimensional Interactive Laughter Evaluation (SMILE) program.

"Humor is a great way to get people to relax," John says. "These days, I carry a 'humor kit' with me everywhere I go."

Since 1992, the year both John and his wife retired from their teaching jobs, the pair have been traveling the country offering humor workshops.

The Murphys conduct between 70-75 workshops per year in various locations throughout the country, speaking to national and state conventions, educators, businesses, community clubs, associations, health care organizations, and people in all walks of life who are under stress.

Two years ago during the course of all of their touring, the Murphys discovered the SMILE program which was designed by neurologist Barry Bittman.

John says the program allows people like he and his wife to iden-

Support building for home show

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

Don't send Junior upstairs to clean his room. That clutter and chaos could be just the ticket to a $5,000 makeover of the messy room in question.

The giveaway is just one of many treats waiting for people who show up at the South Shore Home Show. The show opens Thursday, March 30 for a four-day run at the Marshfield Fairgrounds.

South Shore homeowners who hate the slow-and-go trek to Boston, will discover ways to renovate, remodel or improve their way out of homeowner hassles in their own backyard:

Does your bathroom look like a refugee from the Eisenhower Era?

Is your kitchen too dark for gourmet cooking?

Do you have the heartbreak of peeling paint or ugly siding?

Does your tap water taste like a chemical stew?

Exhibitors will show attendees more ways to solve those problems and any others that can be imagined than they ever dreamed existed. Want to chuck it all and start from scratch? Realtors and mortgage companies are waiting to help the harried find and afford that dream house.

"If you are thinking about doing anything small or big, the home show is the place to go for ideas, whether you are going to do it yourself or use a professional," says show manager Jill Daly. "People can shop, compare and save, all at the home show."

Daly and her sister, Kim Kelly, own and operate Atlantic Show Group of Kingston. The business may only be two years old and the Marshfield show only in its second year, but they are no neophytes in the home show world. They have a combined 20 years of experience working with the largest producers of trade shows in the world. They know the business from the ground floor up, having worked in just about every capacity possible. In addition to the Marshfield show, they stage home shows in West Palm Beach and Savannah and are in negotiations to produce a home show in New York City.

"The best part about it is that some people will go to the show with no idea of doing a particular project. They'll see a business representative, talk to him and say, 'Yeah. That's something I want to do.' "

— Kim Kelly

For those who wonder how the dusty fairgrounds can accommodate the crowd on both sides of the exhibit booths, Daly and Kelly provided the answer last year.

"We brought the building to Marshfield," said Daly.

The building is a temporary structure that will be put up for the run of the show. Once constructed on site, it will provide a warm, well-lit and attractive environment for both exhibitors and attendees.

The building arrived last week on four flatbed trucks. It took five days and an 80-ton crane to pull the walls up on the "foundation" and cap the whole thing off with a roof capable of handling one

A 'Dream' come true

Cohasset musician goes solo

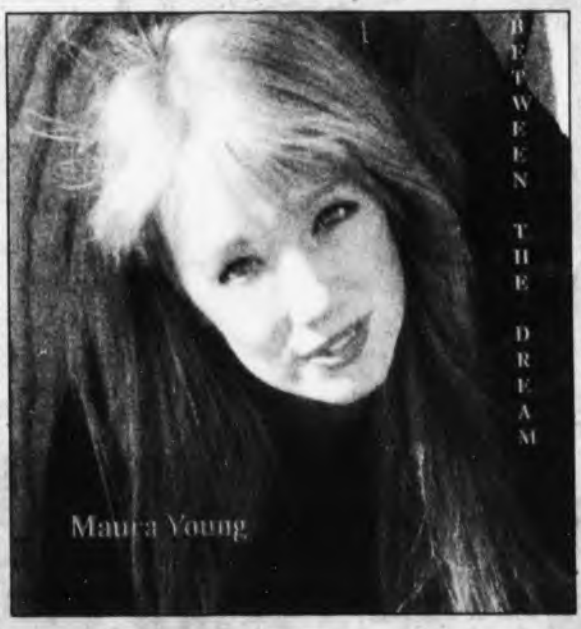
By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's Maura Young has performed before live audiences in the past, but her March 31 gig at The Beachcomber in Wollaston marks a giant leap into uncharted waters for the former lead singer of the group Parti-Colored Fives.

Young will be debuting songs from her first solo CD venture "Between The Dream" and new material from her yet-to-be-released follow-up CD at the popular Wollaston Beach nightspot, which features live bands and enthusiastic audiences.

You don't have to listen long to the "Between The Dream" cuts to realize Young offers something for everybody and respects her audience and the message she tries to convey with every song. The CD serves up a potpourri of rock, folk and pop songs and the lyrics tell us as much about the 27-year-old singer as the music itself. Young wrote all the songs and, along with Joe Clapp, who will be on lead guitar come Friday night, produced and arranged the CD's songs.

Young also possesses a voice that allows her the range of cranking out songs from Melissa Etheridge to Pat Benetar. She is looking forward to letting loose when takes the stage with Clapp, bassist Marc Friedman and drummer Jim McGathey for an original 15-song set. Young will also include "a couple of cover songs" as part of her show, which is on the same bill as the very popular band, Two Ton Shoe.



"I'm really excited," said Young. "I want everything to be perfect, although it never is. I've worked so hard for this. It'll be good. This is my baby. It's a little frightening but just as exciting."

Young, who has been performing live for seven years, worked a full year to complete the "Between The Dream" piece. Her second CD is moving along quicker with eight of the 15 songs having already been completed. Young attributes experience and not having to perform with Parti-Colored Fives as two reasons work on the follow-up album is well ahead of the pace it took to complete "Between The Dream."

"It stays more on the pop side," Young said when describing her second CD. "It's about life. Everybody has dealt with it."

It's no accident "Between The Dream" was picked by Young as the title of her debut

Funny business at Laredo's

Local comedians promise to be a riot

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The last time there was live standup comedy at 270 Washington Street (Route 53) in Pembroke — the current location of the Barnside Restaurant/Laredo's Pub — was in the early 90s, a hot era for prime comic material.

Dan Quayle was vice-president ('nuff said). The Amy Fisher/Joey Buttafucco scandal was simply a comedy writer's and tabloid publisher's dream. TV was ruled by the trashy likes of The Simpsons, Rosanne and Married...With Children. The music business was suffering the career-peaks of dancing cartoons like Micheal Bolton and Milli Vanilli. And the 270 Washington Street address was known as The Renaissance, which kept pace with the Boston and national comedy club scenes with weekly, dependably crowd-drawing comic/improv shows. The pub's comedy stage hosted all of the Boston scene's best, such as Lenny Clarke, Steve Sweeney, Jimmy Tingle, Steve Wright and Kevin Meaney, as well as a few top-billing out-of-towners like Bob Goldthwait and Wendy Leiberman.

A veteran of the local comedy scene, Mary Ellen DePetrillo, says "we have lots of energy and we care about the industry."

The current new-millennium era might not have quite the same zeitgeist as a decade ago, but there's talk that the vibrant Boston comedy circuit of the 80s and early 90s might be on the upswing once again. And the new age will surely bring a fresh wealth of comic fodder to draw from. Laredo's Pub, upstairs at the Barnside Restaurant, hopes to join in the resurgence from the South Shore, when it presents Laff Loft Comedy Riot on Saturday, April 1 at 8 p.m.

Laff Loft is planning a regular live comedy series at Laredo's. The show will host a triple-bill featuring some of the best, experienced South Shore-based comics, including Marshfield's Tom Dunham and Weymouth's Bob Niles, both of whom also shared the bill for another recent local comedy club opening at Weymouth's No-Wey Cafe in January, plus North Easton's Mary Ellen DePetrillo. Serving as emcee will be Paul Wayne, a well-noted comedian/musician and frequently demanded opening act on the Bay State theatre circuit who also owns and directs the Boston Comedy Company from his home in Hanson. Wayne and the BCC will be handling booking and publicity for this and future shows at Laredo's, which like the No-Wey Café is an official Boston Comedy Club. Seating capacity in the upstairs Laredo's room is about 150, and tickets for the show are $6.

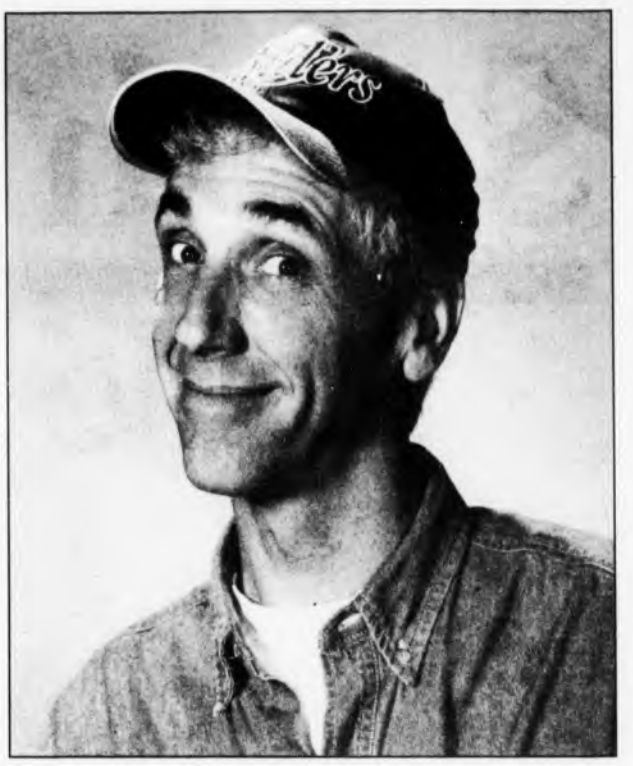
"We're bringing back standup comedy to this room for the first time in quite a few years," said Laredo's manager Leigh Ann Palaima, whose family has owned and operated the pub for the past three-and-a-half years. "We're hoping to make comedy a regular feature here and if this opening night gets a good turnout, we'll do shows every two weeks."

Dunham is a Marshfield native who could be described as the South Shore's comic laureate, opening for national acts at the South Shore Music Circus as well as playing numerous other area community and fundraising events. His standup material always contains a strong, perceptive local slant, typified by such lines as "there's some new low-income housing going up in Norwell, it's called Weymouth," or inquiries with audience members of what town they come from, followed by an almost telepathic reading of what kind of car he/she drives. Until recently, Dunham also authored a weekly humor column called "Parental Ramblings," about raising kids and suburbia homelife, for the Mariner's Kingston and Pembroke editions.

Niles, a welder in Weymouth by day, has also been a frequent feature performer in the local and Boston club scenes. His highly-charged, highly-barbed standup style offers what Wayne describes as a unique ability to tell a story for the thousandth time and make it sound like the first.

DePetrillo, a Cranston, Rhode Island native, devotes her comic material to, as she puts it, kids, cats, dogs and "the great American life." While earning rave reviews from press and media for her club and college standup work in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Texas, the comedienne is credited for writing, directing and producing the first all-woman comedy show in Rhode Island, Ladies Only, Comedy and Conversation for Women '92, and for an engaging one-woman show, Riding Fences, for the Rhode Island Project AIDS, both events held in Providence.

DePetrillo, like Dunham, is a veteran of the comedy scene heyday of a decade back. She also recognizes that the club atmosphere has changed some over time, but assures that the scene is far from being dried up yet.



By day, comedian Bob Niles is a welder.

"The truth about all of us playing this show," said the comedienne, "is that we're all friends. We've been in this business for a long time, we've all gone different places at different levels of the business, like TV and radio appearances, playing cruise ships and so on. We've all got strong credits to our name."

"It's also true that a lot of the fans who used to go to comedy shows 10 and 15 years ago are now into careers and family life and don't always want to drive a long way into the city to go to the clubs. But on the other hand, people don't realize the comedy talent that's still out here. We're not in some dive, or hole-in-the-wall club, we have lots of energy and we care about the industry. We can tell people in the suburbs that the talent at these shows will be just as good if not better that what they'll find in Boston. For us, it isn't just an ego thing, and it's not open mikes," DePetrillo said.

On a similar note, Dunham added, "At this point for us still working the scene, it's more important to bring comedy to the people instead of making people go to it. And it's mainly because people aren't willing to travel as much as they used to to go to shows. But we guarantee for anyone who wants to come out to this opening that everyone onstage will be in a jovial mood."

Dunham also currently has another media project in the works. Starting this fall, the comic will be hosting the South Shore Media One program Streetwise, a comedy gameshow to promote safe driving. He even promotes in part from the angle that if people are at home watching the show on local cable, they won't be out driving.

tify how to make "people with the blues" laugh and understand the concepts of humor through a simple questionnaire.

The way SMILE works is people call up and request a copy of the SMILE questionnaire, fill it out, and send it back to the Murphys. After the Murphys receive a questionnaire, they evaluate it through a computer program, and then they produce an extensive humor profile based on the questionnaire's content. The profile consists of funny television programs and movies a given individual may enjoy, and the profile also give suggestions on various humor books and magazines to read.

The Murphys say the profile is a tool to show people what actually tickles their funny bones.

John says through the SMILE program, people who suffer from a lack of humor in their lives will learn about such concepts as treating stress with humor, giving yourself a personalized "humor prescription," and "harnessing the healing power of humor."

John is someone who knows about that healing power.

"I had a heart attack in 1988," John says. "During my recuperation period, when I used humor in my life, I found I reduced some of the stress pains I was having."

Years after his heart attack, John says he was diagnosed with cancer, but he noted he managed to get through that ordeal by making jokes with the medical staff performing his cancer-removing operation.

"Humor is something you can use almost anywhere at anytime," John says. "Ninety percent of our work shows people how they can reduce their stress by using humor more often."

Although John is not a doctor of any sort, he still works "with neurologically involved clients in rehabilitation settings." John is also a certified speech-language pathologist and a professional speaker as well.

His wife Ann is the author of 12 books on parenting issues, and also served as a teacher in Hingham for many years.

But now, implementing the SMILE program and continuing their humor workshops is a full time job, but the pair has no complaints about their busy, involved lifestyle.

The Murphys also practice what they preach. They are big fans of funny people like Bill Cosby, Garrison Keillor, Carol Burnett, Johnny Carson, and Dave Barry.

The Murphys say they are in touch with the things that make them laugh and they both stressed that it's easy for anyone to get in touch with their humorous side.

"With the SMILE program," John says, "we can tailor a humor prescription for anyone. More people need to learn the actual value of laughing."

He added "It's a fact that children laugh approximately 400 times a day. Yet, on average, adults typically laugh six to eight times each day. Where did the humor go?"

"We teach people to capture the humor in their own lives," Ann says, "and to not let the funny stuff get away. Sometimes, in order to laugh, you only need to look at past embarrassing moments in your own life."

John adds "Everyone has had a time in their life when they've heard a great storyteller. After someone watches a storyteller, they will often say 'where did they get that material?' Part of the answer can be found through the SMILE program, as a lot of the funny stories people tell are extracted from one's own experience."

> "Ninety percent of our work shows people how they can reduce their stress by using humor more often."
> — John Murphy

John says improving one's sense of what is humorous can help individuals act younger, feel younger, project a happier image, and enjoy the quality of life more thoroughly.

"When you're funny," John says, "you're likable. When you're likable, you're more fun to be with. It's that simple. The very best humor is when you can learn to laugh at yourself."

So far, under the SMILE program, the Murphys have only received a limited number of requests for questionnaires, but they are confident the trend will catch on. They noted the people who have tried the questionnaires are finding them very useful.

"People seem to be getting an abundance of information from our suggestions," John says. "We're finding a lot of people are under a great deal of stress, but overall, we're getting very upbeat responses. Just the experience of laughing more often will get these people to follow more of our suggestions."

"We see people lighten up in front of our eyes when we do our workshops," Ann says. "We know we've done something when we see a lot of laughing and smiling among groups."

Ann says she enjoys doing the SMILE program, but she thoroughly enjoys working directly with people at the workshops.

"We do a lot of activities with people," she says, "and everyone enjoys them." One of her favorite quotes, she says, is, 'It's bad to suppress laughter. It just goes down and spreads to your hips.'"

"Humor is a wonderful distraction when you need it to be," John says. He says one of his favorite quotes on the subject of humor goes as follows: "Laughter is a powerful tool in a powerless situation."

Focaccia is a bread that fills many needs

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Focaccia, the all-purpose Italian bread served as a snack or with soups or salads, is beyond the pale for most of us at home. Many recipes call for huge amounts of flour (6 to 7 cups), the preparation takes the better part of an afternoon, and it often comes out of the oven tough and dense. The question was, is there a quick and easy way to prepare the dough which, at the same time, produces a light, fragrant bread?

I started my testing by cooking recipes from "Trattoria Cooking, Essentials of Classic Italian Cooking" and the "New Joy of Cooking." I concluded that 3 1/2 cups of flour was best since that made just enough dough to fit into a standard jelly roll pan, the container of choice for baking focaccia. So my working recipe included 3 1/2 cups flour, 1 tablespoon salt, 1 tablespoon yeast, 2 tablespoons olive oil, and 1 1/3 cups water.

My next test involved the rising method. In order to produce more flavor, many bread recipes start with a sponge – a small amount of yeast plus one cup each of flour and water – which is allowed to develop slowly at room temperature. Later, the additional ingredients are added and the bread is kneaded and allowed to rise. In fact, this approach did produce a yeastier bread but since focaccia derives much of its flavor from its olive oil topping, I felt that this step was unnecessary.

Taking the opposite tack, I found that Rapid Rise Yeast cut the rising time in half and did a very good job. Now the bread rose in under an hour and the second rise was less than 30 minutes. I could have focaccia on the table in less than two hours including baking time. (Using a warm oven as a proofing box also shortened the rising time.)

I found that regular all-purpose flour was just fine; bread flour made an unpleasantly chewy product, and I did not like a combination of the two types. Most recipes do not use enough water, and therefore produce a dense dough. After much testing I ended up with 1 1/2 cups of water to 3 1/2 cups of flour. Wet dough creates the signature air holes in the bread rather than the very tight crumb of many American focaccia recipes.

For a topping, I was using just olive oil and kosher or coarse salt. Without the oil, focaccia is nothing more than a naked pizza. I tested adding the olive oil as a topping versus including it in the dough and preferred the former. Other tests included adding ingredients to the bread before baking. I tried garlic (it cooks unevenly), chopped onion (also cooks unevenly), rosemary (not bad, but has a very strong raw flavor), basil (turns black and loses flavor), and sage (too strong). I do like, however, adding a bit of finely chopped rosemary to the bread after baking – just don't add too much.

This dough can be kneaded by hand, in a standing mixer, or with a food processor, the last method taking about a minute with a quick hand-finish. I baked the bread at 375, 400 and 425 degrees. The bread baked at 375 was too dry and tough, the bread at 425 degrees was too brown and spotted, and the 400 degree oven was just right, producing focaccia with an even, golden brown appearance.

QUICK AND EASY FOCACCIA

If you do not have Rapid Rise Yeast, use regular active yeast but note that the rising times will double. You will need a 10 by 14 inch jelly roll pan (or a cookie sheet) to make this recipe. To further streamline preparation, use a food processor to knead the dough and preheat your oven to 200 degrees, turn off, and then place the dough into the oven for the first rise. This will reduce the rising time by 20 to 30 percent.

3 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons Kosher salt
1 package Rapid Rise Yeast (1/4 ounce or about 2 1/2 teaspoons)
1 1/2 cups hand-hot water (110 to 120 degrees)
5 tablespoons high-quality olive oil Finely chopped fresh rosemary to taste for serving, optional

1. To shorten the rising time, preheat your oven to 200 degrees and then turn off.

2. Place the flour and one tablespoon salt into a large mixing bowl and mix using a large rubber spatula, wooden spoon, or your fingers. Combine the yeast and the water and stir to dissolve. Add the yeast/water mixture to the flour mixture and stir with a large rubber spatula, wooden spoon, or your hands until a rough dough is formed.

3. Empty the contents of the bowl onto a counter and knead energetically for 10 minutes. To do this step in a standing mixer, use the dough hook and reduce the kneading time to 5 minutes. (You can also add the dry ingredients to the bowl of a food processor, turn the machine on, and slowly add the yeast/water mixture through the feed tube. Process until mixture forms a rough ball. Let rest 45 seconds. Process again for 35 seconds. Remove from bowl and knead by hand for 1 to 2 minutes or until dough is smooth and pliable.) Wash and wipe the mixing bowl and lightly coat with oil. Place the dough in the bowl and cover with plastic wrap. Let rise at room temperature until doubled in bulk, about 1 hour, or place in the warm oven for about 40 minutes or until doubled.

4. Place the dough onto a jelly roll pan or cookie sheet that has been smeared with one tablespoon olive oil. Turn the dough to coat both sides with the oil. Flatten and shape the dough into a rectangle about 14 X 10 inches and about 1/2 inch thick. This can be done by gently pulling and poking the dough repeatedly. Make the thickness of the dough as consistent as possible. Cover with plastic wrap and let rise on kitchen counter until puffy and about 1 inch thick, about 20 to 30 minutes. Meanwhile, heat oven to 400 degrees and adjust oven rack to center position.

5. Use your fingertips to dimple the surface of the dough. Be sure to have many dimples no more than 2 inches apart. Drizzle the focaccia with the remaining olive oil and sprinkle with the remaining salt. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes or until golden brown and firm to the touch. Cool for 5 minutes before serving. If you like, sprinkle with a small amount of finely chopped rosemary before serving.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29

This is a day to finish projects already begun; review, redo and repair, tie up loose ends. The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn. However, it is inactive until 4:34 p.m. That means that new starts are off limits. An applying alignment of Mercury and Pluto warns against signing contracts or making important decisions. The moon enters Aquarius at 4:34 p.m.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30

Challenging alignments of Mercury/Pluto and Mars/Neptune affect today and tomorrow. Keep a low profile. Do not initiate new projects, launch ventures. Pursue activities that help you relax and maintain a positive outlook. Tackle jobs that need repair, renovation. Keep an open mind; you can find new solutions to old problems. Try not to concern yourself with situations that are out of your control. Get extra rest tonight.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31

The combination of Mars-Neptune and moon/Uranus alignments can make for a topsy-turvy morning. Stop, look and listen. People may be late for appointments, unexpected situations may arise that demand your immediate attention. At 7:19 a.m. the Aquarius moon becomes inactive. This day is ideal for vacationing. Take extra time out for yourself; relax, unwind, recharge your batteries.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1

April's planetary patterns promise an exciting, eventful month. You can make great strides toward personal or professional goals. Today the moon enters Pisces at 3:12 a.m., forming harmonious contacts to Mars in the afternoon and Jupiter in the evening. In addition, applying alignments of the sun/Pluto and Mercury/Saturn urge you to initiate new starts, sign contracts, make decisions and commitments. Go for the gold.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2

A Pisces moon all day generates a laid-back mood. It is okay to initiate new activities. However, aspects are more favorable after April 4, when the new moon culminates. Kick back and enjoy favorite friends and leisure activities. Create or appreciate art, music, poetry and dance.

MONDAY, APRIL 3

The morning may be slow-starting. Allow extra time for unexpected delays or distractions. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 3:44 a.m. and travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 11:22 a.m. Others may be sleepy, forgetful, careless. The moon enters fiery Aries at 11:22 a.m., making for the final windup to this month's new moon. This is a day to clean out, reorganize, follow through. Take extra time out for yourself. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Plan a quiet evening.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4

Wake up in a good mood. People may be irritable, argumentative. Stay busy with projects that need follow through and finishing. Get your life in order. The dark side of a new moon continues until 2:12 p.m., when the sun and moon come together at 15-degrees of Aries. Influences turn around completely in the late afternoon and evening. You can launch new ventures between 2:12 and 10:03 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5

An inactive Aries moon warns you to cool your heels this morning. Don't get caught up in the whirlwind of activity. Think before you act. An applying alignment of Mars/Jupiter also impacts the day. Channel high energy constructively; tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Finish old business rather than starting new activities. At 3:29 p.m. the moon enters Taurus. Take time for inner reflection this evening; strive for greater spiritual vision.

Support building for South Shore home show of New England's spring snowstorms if necessary. At the close of the home show, it will take two days to strike the building and haul it make to the lessor in Tennessee.

The "instant" building provides all the amenities an exhibitor or visitor could need or want. In addition to heat and electricity, the building also contains bathroom facilities, food concessions and relaxation areas to encourage visitors to come early and stay all day.

Daly and Kelly have thought of everything in their effort to provide the South Shore with a world class home show.

"It's the women who make the decision to go and she drags her husband and kids along," said Daly. "We knew we had to offer a good variety of exhibitors as well as something for the men and something for the kids to make them want to stay all day, too."

The messy bedroom contest is one way to reach out to the small fry. Rumor has it the Easter Bunny may make a stop in Marshfield on his way down bunny trail.

"We do have candy, too," adds Kelly. "Lots of candy."

The men in the crowd will find things of special interest to them. This year, the home show has a special garden and outdoor section featuring outdoor furniture, landscape design ideas, lawnmowers, power tools, gas grills, sheds, pools, swing sets – all the essential items a suburban weekend warrior needs to impress family, friends and the neighbors.

Why a South Shore home show?

After doing their homework, Daly and Kelly concluded South Shore residents hate battling traffic tie-ups and Big Dig detours only to find all the companies and contractors only work in Boston and points west and north. They also discovered the region's best kept secret: an amazing housing boom and increasingly upscale demographics. South Shore homeowners have money to spend and they want to spend it locally.

People who attended the last year's home show will find all their favorites back again and plenty of new things to check out.

"Last year, we did extremely well," says Kelly. "This year we have increased by 50 percent or better."

Of the 300 booths the 50,000-square-foot building holds, only 10 booths remained available as of the Friday before the show's opening day. Last year, the sisters had just just under 200 booths in a 32,000-square-feet temporary building. The phenomenal success of last year's show convinced 80 percent of the exhibitors to return. The sisters also attracted a substantial number of businesses that opted for a "wait and see" position last year.. Altogether, more than 150 businesses located from Milton to the Cape will show off their wares and services.

What do exhibitors get for the $775 they plunk down to rent a 10-foot by 10-foot booth for four days? Daly and Kelly answer that question with another question. How and where else would they be able to show their wares to a crowd estimated to reach or exceed 20,000 this year? Last year, the show drew more than 12,000 over the four-day run of the show.

"Some companies don't realize what the show can do for them. They tell us they don't have the staff or the time," says Daly "We say, "Where else can you reach 20,000 potential customers?'"

Kelly reinforces the message, saying, "This is a form of advertising, but the best part about it is that some people will go to the show with no idea of doing a particular project. They'll see a business representative, talk to him and say, 'Yeah. That's something I want to do.' We help businesses create a need."

In exchange for their $7 admission – less with the $1 off coupons good on Thursday and Friday — homeowners get to park for free and walk around and see what's new and exciting for every room in the house, from bathroom fixtures to living room couches as well as ideas and products for the outdoor living space . Builders, realtors, mortgage companies, interior designers, landscape architects and many more service providers will be there, too.

"In a nutshell, you'll find anything that goes inside or outside your house," says Kelly.

About that messy bedroom contest: parents are invited to put embarrassment on ice and submit photographic evidence of crimes against neatness. All photographs will be put on display at the home show for the amusement of the crowd.

The child with the bedroom judged "messiest" wins a complete bedroom set, including bed, bureau, window treatments and other accessories. The "new and improved" bedroom set carries an estimated value of $5,000. Sea Side Baby Furniture and Accessories of Centerville and The Custom Decorator of Pembroke are sponsoring the contest.

Parents of neatniks and those without children need not fret. The home show has a contest with their name on it. One lucky winner will win a new Schrock kitchen. The winner gets to choose any style, wood and finish from Schrock's "Deluxe" cabinet line. In addition to up to 12 Schrock cabinets, the prize also includes a Wilsonart laminate counter. Sponsor Cape Cod Lumber estimates the value of the prize they are donating as $10,000. Entry blanks can be found at Cape Cod Lumber's booth.

The South Shore Home Show opens Thursday, March 30 at the Marshfield Fairgrounds on Route 3A. It runs through Sunday, April 2. Hours are 3 – 9 p.m. Thursday, 2-9 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. – 9 p.m. Saturday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $7 for adults, $2 for children ages 6-12 years old and free for children under six. Discount coupons are available at Tedeschi and Li'l Peach convenience stores. Cohasset musician goes solo work. The song itself deals with the struggle and frustrations a musician faces trying to make a name for herself in the music business.

Like the title song, all the lyrics on "Between The Dream" are based on experiences in Young's own life. That theme hasn't changed with her second trip to the studio. Much of the satisfaction Young receives from writing lyrics and music is the personal aspect of what she tries to share with the audience.

The music doesn't grow stagnant because Young infuses several influences, including rock, pop, folk, eclectic, blues and techno. As a result, no two of her songs sound alike. Young has a wide range when it comes to musical tastes, though she admits rock is her favorite if she had to choose.

"Different is good," Young said. "That's how you come up with your own style. With music, I don't think there is good or bad. I like everything, A to Z.

"Between The Dream" has been selling very well locally and will soon be headed for the shelves of Tower Records in Boston. Young expected the CD would do well along the South Shore because she is recognized by people who have seen her perform as the former Meaghan's Place, Elaine's and Acoustics.

"We developed a pretty good following," Young said of her days with Parti-Colored Fives. "You can only do the local circuit for so long. But I wouldn't have changed a thing. It was fun and it was good music too. But I did want to take it further."

Young will have plenty of friends and family in the audience, and one in particular, on stage with her. Her sister, Anne Marie will be singing back-up vocals. Young laughed and said Anne Marie is almost as excited as she is. She loves the idea of her sister on vocals with her on such a big night.

"It eases the tension because I trust her and she has a great voice," Young said. "She loves music. I have people waiting for this (night) as long as me. They like the music."

"Between The Dream" CDs will be on sale the night of the show and can also be obtained by ordering it online at www.cdfreedom.com and ultrasoundproductions.com.

Cohasset's Maura Young will perform songs from her first solo CD, "Between The Dream", and her upcoming release during a concert March 31 at The Beachcomber in Wollaston.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Build it and they will come to the South Shore Home Show, March 30 to April 2

More than 300 vendors expected

You've heard of the Boston Home Show, well now there's the South Shore Home Show.

More than 150 businesses and 300 vendors will showcase their wares at the largest home show ever held in this area. The event will be held Thursday, March 30 to Sunday, April 2 on the Marshfield Fairgrounds, off Route 3A.

The home show will be housed in a 50,000-square-foot temporary convention center and is expected to draw a huge crowd, perhaps as many as 20,000 visitors to view the many exhibit booths. More than 100 of the vendors will be based on the South Shore.

In 1999, the first year of the home show, more than 12,000 people attended the event which featured some 200 vendors.

Following last year's spectacular success, the show has grown more than 50 percent in terms of anticipated visitors and exhibitors. There is no South Shore convention center large enough to accommodate such a show.

Visitors to the home show will find all kinds of products and services for the home, from top to bottom and inside and out, according to the Atlantic Show Group, Inc., the Kingston company promoting the event. There will be builders, realtors, mortgage companies, and salespeople specializing in kitchens, bathrooms, furniture, and outdoor products.

Jill Daly and Kim Kelly, founders of the Atlantic Show Group, saw a need for a large-scale trade show on the South Shore but were dismayed by the lack of any suitable convention center in the region.

"We decided that if we couldn't find a facility large enough to hold a big-time home show, we would just have to build it ourselves," said Daly.

Daly and Kelly, who are sisters, went to work on plans to construct an impressive 50,000-square-foot Clear Span Temporary Structure on the Marshfield Fairgrounds. The Atlantic Show Group calls the use of these temporary structures an innovative new concept in the trade show industry.

The structure will be equipped with professional heating, lighting and carpeting and will come close to duplicating the comfort of a convention center, according to the two women.

Originally from Weymouth, Daly and Kelly now reside in Kingston where their business is located.

Among the fun and exciting highlights of the home show will be a "Messy Bedroom" contest which is sure to draw the interest of lots of parents. The contest, sponsored by Sea Side Baby Furniture and Accessories of Centerville and The Custom Decorator of Pembroke, will reward the child with the messiest bedroom with a brand new bedroom set.

Participants are asked to bring to the show a photo of their child's unkempt bedroom which will be placed on display. A panel of judges will decide on the messiest bedroom and the winner will receive a new bedroom set, including a bed, bureau, window treatment and other decorative accessories. The prize is valued at $5,000.

In addition to the bedroom prize, the show will feature a drawing for a free Schrock kitchen, valued at $10,000. The winner may choose any style, wood, and finish from the company's deluxe cabinet line. Besides choosing up to 12 cabinets, Cape Cod Lumber, the sponsor of this drawing, will provide the winner with a free Wilsonart laminate counter top. Visitors to the show may sign up for the drawing at the Cape Cod Lumber booth.

Visitors to the home show will find all kinds of products and services for the home, from top to bottom and inside and out, according to the Atlantic Show Group, Inc., the Kingston company promoting the event.

Alantic Show Group partners Kim Kelly and Jill Daly oversee the construction of their huge exposition facility for the upcoming home show at the Marshfield Fairgrounds.

The show will be open from 3 to 9 p.m. on March 30, 2 to 9 p.m. on March 31, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. on April 1, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. April 2. Admission is $7 per person, $2 for children 6-12, and no charge for children under 6.

See your lender first

By Robert Segal
SALES MANAGER, BROCKTON CREDIT UNION

In the past, a common practice for homeowners was to spend several weeks or even months to find a house, and then set out to find a mortgage lender to work with. This system was accepted by all the parties involved because the bank preferred to have a specific property in mind when considering the loan application. Things often got dicey for sellers and realtors because the buyer might end up not qualifying for the loan.

Fortunately for the home-buying process, mortgage lenders have stepped out in front, offering pre-approvals to prospective buyers before they begin to shop for a home. In most cases, the consumer will be pre-approved for the maximum house they can afford within just a few days.

With a pre-approval, you provide the lender with the same documentation that applies to a regular transaction.

The documentation includes:

- A completed loan application
- Copies of three months deposit records
- Copies of W-2 forms for the past two years
- Recent pay stubs representing one month's income and indicating year-to-date income
- Federal income tax returns for the last two years (if self-employed)
- Gift letter documenting cash gifts used toward down payment
- Letters documenting previous credit problems and solutions.

Getting pre-approved is similar to obtaining a mortgage, except there is no property involved. Your lender reviews your application, verifies your income and assets, and evaluates your overall creditworthiness. Any issues that come up are dealt with at this time. Then the lender provides you a letter stating the amount of your pre-approval.

Getting pre-approved is similar to obtaining a mortgage, except there is no property involved. Your lender reviews your application, verifies your income and assets, and evaluates your overall creditworthiness. Any issues that come up are dealt with at this time. Then the lender provides you a letter stating the amount of your pre-approval. Most lenders provide the service at little or no cost. Brockton Credit Union, for example, does pre-approvals for free.

A pre-approval allows the buyer to get approved for a specific loan amount before he or she puts down an offer on a house. Most pre-approvals are good for 90 days. Your letter can be updated for another 90 days by simply providing your lender with updated pay stubs and bank records.

You may be surprised that you qualify for more home than you originally thought you could afford, or you may be able to put down a smaller down payment. Searching for a home is simplified because you can target the price range that is most suitable for you.

Realtors and sellers prefer buyers who have been pre-approved since they are much stronger candidates as they have been put through the bank's underwriting process. Thus, they are more likely to follow through the deal to completion.

Says Bob Simmons, co-owner of Premier Properties Better Homes & Gardens in Easton, "Having a pre-approval letter makes all the difference in the world. Those buyers have the best chances of getting their offers accepted."

Simmons adds, "About 75 percent of our customers come in pre-approved." He says this gives everyone more comfort because the buyer knows exactly how much he or she can afford. And you're not spinning wheels looking at properties that don't make sense. Simmons says some customers come into his office without a mortgage lender in hand. He works with them to look at properties but advises them to get pre-approved right away.

According to Jeff Forsythe, sales associate with the Macdonald and Wood Real Estate Group in Duxbury, between 75 and 85 percent of his customers are in some part of the pre-approval process. He says that in this market, there is so little time to waste, that "having a pre-approval adds much flexibility and responsiveness to the situation." He does his best to make his customers understand its importance.

Robert Segal

Though he stresses this as much as he can, some of his buyers don't get around to it. "It only takes once," he says. "When they lose a property, they learn their lesson."

FINISHING THE PROCESS IS EASY

If you have already been pre-approved for your mortgage, you will be much more confident and comfortable when you sign your purchase and sales agreement. Then call your mortgage lender who will help you finish the process. To do this, you'll need to send along a signed copy of the purchase and sales agreement, a copy of your deposit check, and any additional information needed to complete your file.

With most of the process handled up front, the pathway to the closing is streamlined, and this enables you to get the keys to the front door that much sooner. Having your pre-approval may give you the edge that gets you there.

Robert B. Segal, CFA is sales manager at Brockton Credit Union, which has offices in Brockton, Easton, Canton, Randolph, Abington, Middleboro and East Bridgewater and offers a full range of conventional mortgage loan programs, construction loans, FHA, MHFA and first-time homebuyer loans.

Old World charm and intrigue

Ageless beauty and enduring charm characterize the ambience of this wonderful Tudor home. It is set on almost two acres with a stone terrace overlooking mature plantings, meandering lawns and perennial gardens. A gently curved walkway leads through magnificent holly trees to a pleasing front entry with "good morning" staircase that welcomes you into a home with myriad rooms and spaces for everyone.

The living room is part of the original house and has Old World flavor with original paneling, beamed ceiling, brick fireplace and pocket doors that lead to the solarium and terrace. Entertainment-sized kitchen allows for guests to gather comfortably and overlooks the backyard and reflecting pool.

The second floor offers two worlds...a 90s master suite with generous-sized master bedroom with vaulted ceiling, skylights and electric sensor windows. An adjacent cherry cabinet master bath has a Jacuzzi tub, separate shower, and large walk-in closet. Part of the original home, the other bedrooms have a turn-of-the-century grace with hardwood floors, window seats and one with a fireplace.

The finished lower level can be reached by several avenues including a spiral staircase and includes a bedroom with marvelous built-in bed and storage, a full bath, play room and laundry room.

Wonderful grounds are enhanced by a delightful "pony barn" — perfect for the children or cherished grandchildren. All this and located within walking distance of the Atlantic Ocean, in the charming New England village of Cohasset, yet an easy drive to Boston. The best of all worlds.

Landscaping basics

Analyzing your foundation plantings

Green thumbs up

Brilliant sunshine streams through my bedroom window in the early hours of a perfect spring morning. A flock of cedar waxings suddenly appears among the leafless branches of the nearby trees and a chaotic scene ensues as they swoop down, en masse, to the water garden below to refresh themselves, acrobatically perching on every available stem, branch and stone. A Carolina wren fills the still, crisp air with its clear, melodic song while gathering materials to build its nest. Long strands of ornamental grasses flow from its tiny, curved beak as it flits to and fro, constructing its unique, dome-shaped dwelling in an old plastic ice cream container on the upper shelf of our garage.

Weary from hours of clipping, raking and weeding, I wander through the gardens to witness the rebirth of the perennial borders and enjoy the early blooms of spring. A plump bunny dashes away, leaving behind the remains of a broad expanse of crocuses which look as if they had been trimmed by a lawn mower. Here and there, the vibrant, deep blue blooms of early Siberian squill create a colorful contrast to the lingering blooms of glistening white snowdrops and dazzling yellow daffodils.

The elegant blossoms of the Christmas rose, (Helleborus niger) are beginning to unfold atop rigid, fleshy stems in the shady border. As their silky, white petals age, they gradually acquire tints of dusty rose. Nearby, a large clump of its cousin, the Lenten rose (H. orientalis) is on the verge of bursting into bloom with dozens of mauve, saucer-shaped flowers which persist for weeks amid its glossy, leathery, evergreen foliage. The sweetly-scented, milky-white clusters of Pieris japonica, sometimes referred to as the lily-of-the-valley shrub, fill the garden with a glorious perfume. Despite frigid weather in January, a prolonged period of above normal temperatures has accelerated the emergence of many perennials and an early bloom season seems likely.

One of my first projects each spring is to tidy up the beds and plantings along my front walkway and around the foundation of our home. Once this is accomplished, I retreat to the driveway and then to the street in an effort to honestly critique the overall appearance of these plantings as well as scrutinizing each individual tree, shrub and perennial.

In an established foundation planting, many of the woody plants require annual pruning to restrict their growth and maintain a pleasing shape. As these plants mature, even a routine pruning may not be able to contain the growth of many shrubs. To prevent the foundation planting from becoming a jungle and entirely obliterating walks, windows and entrances, many homeowners are compelled to clip their shrubs into unnatural and often bizarre, unattractive forms.

Even with careful planning by a homeowner or a professional landscape designer, there comes a time when the foundation planting will require a face-lift and regrettably, this usually necessitates the removal of the majority of overgrown shrubs, many of which have become lopsided as they competed with their neighbors for space and light. Trying to save a shrub here and there usually creates more problems with new introductions struggling to compete and appearing dwarfed by the mature specimens. Some of these older shrubs, especially azaleas and rhododendrons, can be transplanted in the spring to other locations, particularly around the perimeter of your landscape to serve as screens or backdrops.

Whether you are beginning from scratch with a newer home or facing the challenge of renovating an overgrown planting, begin by analyzing the spaces immediately surrounding your foundation and looking critically at your home to determine its positive and negative features. New homes, in particular, can appear as awkward, dominant structures, seemingly out-of-place, due largely in part to their strong vertical thrust in contrast to the expansive horizontal line of the ground plane. Plants can be used effectively to highlight desirable attributes, hide negative features, soften strong vertical or horizontal lines or strengthen weak lines, or they can help to direct the flow of traffic around your property.

One of my first projects each spring is to tidy up the beds and plantings along my front walkway and around the foundation of our home. Once this is accomplished, I retreat to the driveway and then to the street in an effort to honestly critique the overall appearance of these plantings as well as scrutinizing each individual tree, shrub and perennial.

As you make your observations, be sure to note the light exposure around your home at several times during the day, taking into account any deciduous trees which have yet to leaf out and which are likely to cast shade during the warmer months. Pay close attention to first floor windows and determine whether they are to function as a source of light, air, or both, taking into consideration the direction they face and their distance from the ground. On a southerly- or westerly-facing side of your home, you may want to plant shrubs or trees to block the hot, afternoon summer sun or you may wish to use plants to provide privacy for bedroom or bathroom windows or private sitting areas. Other windows may require shorter plantings to enable you to view the approach of visitors up your driveway or walk or allow the sunlight to fill a darker, northerly-facing room. Take copious notes during your analysis, for this information will greatly facilitate the design process enabling you to select the proper plants to fulfill your objectives.

Laptop insurance is a good idea

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Ask George

Q. We are planning a trip to Florida this summer and I have a question concerning the X-ray machine at the airport check-in.

I plan to bring along a digital camera and a laptop computer, but I don't want to check them because I am concerned about physical damage.

On the other hand, if I carry them on, I am concerned about the effect of X-rays on these two devices.

What would you recommend?

A. First, you should never, ever, put expensive equipment like that in your checked luggage. Don't even think about it! Not only is it more likely to be stolen (these things do happen), but it can easily be damaged.

The only real threat to a laptop is coming in contact with a powerful magnet, not X-rays, so don't worry about the X-ray machines found at the security gate.

To play it safe, cocoon your laptop in some bubble wrap because laptop screens can be very fragile as I've learned from personal experience.

And laptop insurance from a company such as Safeware, (800) 800-1492, or www.safeware.com, is relatively inexpensive and a good idea.

Q. We are considering a trip to China in September. We want a tour of no longer than two weeks, which includes a Yangtze River cruise and a side trip to Xi'an, Beijing and Shanghai.

Could you make suggestions as to a tour company or cruise line we might consider? Also, would there be a better time of the year to visit that part of China?

A. Regal China Cruises would fit the bill nicely. Their cruises operate between Wuhan and Chongqing on the Yangtze River, offering an upstream cruise for six days and five nights, and a downstream cruise for four days and three nights.

Regal China Cruises works with many tour operators in China, and can provide packages to the other areas of China you specified. For information and prices, call your travel agent or (800) 808-3388.

The best travel time for a Yangtze River cruise is April through May, and September through October.

Q. Do you know something that we don't? We were enticed by the two-for-one business-class and first-class airfare feature offered by American Express' Platinum Card and, so, forked over the $300 annual fee.

But, when we wanted to fly to Paris recently, we were advised that we had to fly to Newark and take Continental to Paris to qualify for the deal - that was the only route available. In other words, we now understand that the two-for-one deal is limited - with lots of strings attached.

We've decided that the Amex Platinum is not worth the cost (although the magazine is very nice). Your thoughts would be appreciated.

A. The following airlines participate in the two-for-one program: Air Lingus, Aerolineas Argentinas, Aeromexico, Air France, Air New Zealand, Alitalia, Asiana Airlines, Cathay Pacific, Continental Airlines, EL AL Israel Airlines, Iberia, LanChile Airlines, Lufthansa, Malaysia Airlines, SAS and Swissair. So, it's not just Continental.

It might have been that when you wanted to travel only Continental had seats available under the program, since they're subject to availability.

Another reader asked how to apply for the Platinum Card. Although it's supposedly by invitation only, if a card member in good standing called the customer service number on their card and requested to be "invited," he or she would be considered.

Q. In a recent column, you discussed how to save on business-class fares. I remember reading that buying an around-the-world ticket from an agency specializing in this kind of fare is a good way to save. Can you comment?

A. One of the best deals in travel is buying a business-class around-the-world ticket. It's much cheaper than buying a normal round-trip ticket, and lets you make stopovers that would normally cost a good deal more.

For example, RTW specialist Ticket Planet (www.ticketplanet.com or 1-800-799-8000) offers an itinerary from New York - Osaka - Bangkok - Delhi - London - New York for just $2,699 in business class.

A Los Angeles - Tahiti - Cook Islands - Fiji - Auckland/Christchurch - Cairns/Perth or Darwin - Bali - Singapore - Bangkok - Taipei - Los Angeles itinerary is $3,599.

Compare those prices with what normal business-class round-trips cost and you'll be amazed. Of course, economy is even cheaper, but the fare differences aren't as big.

To find these deals, go to the Web site and click on "business and first class fares."

Ticket Planet also offers a lot of other great deals, not just on RTW fares.

No business like the film exhibition business

By Robert Aicardi
STAFF WRITER

If it's true, as Irving Berlin put it, that "there's no business like show business," it's also true that there's no business like the film exhibition business.

According to David Scott of Patriot Cinemas, which runs the Loring Hall Theater in Hingham and the Cameo Theater in Weymouth, "Good pictures don't necessarily mean good business. The fun part of this business is that you don't know what will happen. There are always surprises."

Brian Callaghan, director of communications for General Cinema, which operates more than 1,000 screens at more than 150 locations in 24 states, including Massachusetts, agrees, pointing to the box office failure of "Man on the Moon," starring Jim Carrey as the late comedian Andy Kaufman.

"That was a terrific movie, and most people who saw it liked it, but sometimes well-made movies don't become big hits," Callaghan said.

Despite unexpected disappointments like "Man on the Moon," 1999 was a remarkable year for the film business, thanks in large part to such sleeper hits as "The Blair Witch Project."

"Movie going is now at the highest level it has been in this country since the 1950s," Callaghan said. "More tickets were sold last year than at any time since the dawn of the TV era. Some thought that because of VCRs and cable TV, the movie business would be hurt because people would want to stay home, but people like to get out of their homes. They want the excitement of something they can't get on the small screen."

General Cinema's philosophy, he said, is to provide customers with the best service, the best concessions, and the best movie presentation it possibly can.

"I think that we succeed at that quite well, especially in Braintree," Callaghan said.

General Cinema decided seven years ago to open a 10-screen theater off Forbes Road in Braintree. "In our previous theater there, we only had four screens, so we could only show a fraction of the films we really wanted to show. Going to 10 screens meant that we could offer more films to our patrons," Callaghan said.

It also meant that customers could have access to what Callaghan called "a state of the art concession stand" featuring Pizzeria Uno pizza, gourmet coffees, desserts, and cappuccino.

"We believe in giving customers as many different options as possible," he said. "That's why we not only show more films, we also show some of them more times on more screens. Multiple screens mean that people are less likely to arrive at the theater and find out that they just missed a show."

"We believe in giving customers as many different options as possible. That's why we not only show more films, we also show some of them more times on more screens. Multiple screens mean that people are less likely to arrive at the theater and find out that they just missed a show."

–Brian Callaghan, director of communications for General Cinema

Callaghan said that the Braintree theater has been a success since it opened in May 1993.

"People like it for several reasons," he said. "It's conveniently located near the South Shore Plaza. There is ample parking. One of people's pet peeves is when they have trouble finding parking spaces. There is a state of the art projection and sound system which guarantees that people are seeing and hearing the film the way it's supposed to be seen and heard."

Although the theater is busiest from Memorial Day through Labor Day and Thanksgiving through New Year's Day, Callaghan pointed to several examples of successful films which didn't come out at those times, including "The Matrix," which was released in April, and "The Mummy," which was released in early May.

Top 10 Movies of 1999

Title	Date Released	Opening Weekend	Total for 1999
1. The Phantom Menace	May 19	$64.8m	$429.8m
2. The Sixth Sense	Aug 6	$26.6m	$275.7m
3. Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me	Jun 11	$55.0m	$205.9m
4. Toy Story 2	Nov 26	$53.3m	$177.5m
5. The Matrix	Mar 31	$27.8m	$171.4m
6. Tarzan	Jun 18	$34.1m	$170.8m
7. Big Daddy	Jun 25	$41.5m	$163.4m
8. The Mummy	Jun 7	$43.4m	$155.2m
9. Runaway Bride	Jul 30	$35.0m	$151.9m
10. The Blair Witch Project	Jun 30	$29.2m	$140.5m

Films that did fit the pattern, he said, included "Toy Story 2," a Thanksgiving release which has grossed more than its predecessor, and "Stuart Little," which has brought in $100 million to date.

Callaghan has a theory why "Stuart Little," an adaptation of the classic E. B. White story, did so well during the Christmas season.

"People thought that there would be no room for another kids' picture, but kids may have seen 'Toy Story 2' at Thanksgiving and then thought that they wanted to see something else," he said.

Asked whether audiences are turned off by long films like the three-hour Tom Hanks death-row drama, "The Green Mile," Callaghan replied, "I have a one word answer: 'Titanic.' People think that theaters don't like long movies because we can only show them three times a day, as opposed to four times a day, but 'Titanic' is the most successful film of all time, and it's about four hours long.

"If a movie is good, with a well-told story and enjoyable characters, the length isn't really a factor. We may not show it as many times a day, but the shows we do have tend to sell out. It's also good for concessions, because when people go to see a three hour movie, they're more likely to want popcorn and Pepsi."

"Titanic," which went on to win the Best Picture Oscar, ran for six months and was the No. 1 movie in the country for 15 weeks, which was unprecedented, according to Callaghan.

How General Cinema makes decisions about what movies are shown varies from theater to theater.

"In Braintree, we can book as many films as we can fit in," Callaghan explained. "Under Massachusetts law, in order to book a film, it has to be screened here first. Some states still have what's known as 'blind bidding,' but not Massachusetts."

General Cinema has high hopes for many upcoming films, including "Gladiator," which is set in ancient Rome; "Mission: Impossible 2" with Tom Cruise; "Dinosaurs," a computer-generated animated feature from Disney; and "Me, Myself, and Irene," starring Jim Carrey.

Among the 22 screens operated in five locations by Patriot Cinemas is the Loring Hall in Hingham, which has specialized in "art house" films since 1992.

"We had played one every once in a while and done well, so we decided to go to all art films," Scott said. "Since then, every year has been our best year. Business gets better every year. We're going to stick with this format."

What makes the Loring Hall distinctive is not the number of its seats (325, including 75 in the balcony), but its structure.

"There aren't many one-screen theaters left," Scott said. "With the exception of Wollaston, it's the only one around."

However, there is a drawback with having just one screen, he explained.

"The only trouble is that when you open a picture like 'The Cider House Rules,' it's great to get a film like that, but you have to make a long-term commitment to it," Scott said. "The trouble with a single screen is that you can't bring in other films. We wish that we could play more films for our audience."

At the Loring Hall, the busiest times of the year are from Christmas to March and in the summer.

Asked what films have done well there, Scott replied, "'Waking Ned Devine' takes the cake. That was one of the busiest films we've had. We played it for nine weeks, and we could have played it more. On the other hand, 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Cookie's Fortune,' and 'Flawless' with Robert De Niro didn't do as well as we had hoped."

The key in booking for an art house theater is "to keep an ear to the ground," Scott emphasized.

"You look at theaters across the country, and you read reviews," he said. "Art house films tend to open in New York and Los Angeles before they come to Boston. We try to play something that challenges the mind, because Hingham is an educated area."

The Cameo, which opened in Weymouth in 1939, has changed its format several times over the years.

"When we bought it in the early '70s, it was a single-screen theater, and admission was a dollar," Scott recalled. "In the early '80s, there was an abundance of first-run product, so we changed it to a first-run theater and did very well. Then, in 1985, we split it into two screens."

On Christmas Day in 1994, the Cameo returned to a $1 admission policy, which remained in effect until last March, when the ticket price rose to $1.50.

"We're not going to change it," Scott said. "Business is excellent. I just wish that we could run more children's films because we try to cater to families. Christmas through March and the summer are our busiest times, but a rainy weekend will pack them in at any time of the year.

"Most Innovative Cymbal Manufacturer"

"Best Quality & Craftsmanship In Cymbals"

"Most Consumer/Service Oriented Company"

Modern Drummer Magazine
1999 Consumers Poll Awards

In an unprecedented "clean sweep" of the cymbal manufacturers' category, Zildjian recently took top honors in all three available categories of the recent Modern Drummer Magazine Consumers Poll.

Modern Drummer Magazine is the most popular and widely read drumming publication in the world. The Consumers Poll Awards are based upon a survey of its readers that the magazine conducts every three years. Drummers are invited to list their favorite manufacturers in a variety of categories.

The results send a very simple but important message... professional drummers and percussionists choose their cymbals by name - Zildjian. Because if it doesn't say Zildjian, it's not an authentic Zildjian cymbal.

The Only Serious Choice.

ADVERTISER PROFILE

Zildjian recognized around the world as the best made, best quality cymbal

Today the word Zildjian is synonymous with the word cymbal. But then, curiously enough, it always has been. In 1623, in the City of Constantinople, an alchemist named Avedis discovered a still-secret process for treating alloys, and used this process to produce cymbals, whose sound had extraordinary clarity and power. As the fame of the cymbal maker and his cymbals spread, he was given the name "Zildjian" - the Turkish word for "cymbal-smith." Today, while that process has been refined and perfected over the years, it is still used by the Zildjian Company to produce the finest cymbals in the world.

The history of Zildjian and the history of music are not easily separated. Each influenced and advanced the other. For instance, Zildjian Cymbals were judged to be of such fine musical quality that it led composers to incorporate cymbals into classical music. Nowhere, however, was this interaction more apparent than after Avedis Zildjian III moved the family business to the United States in 1929. In the true spirit of Jazz, Avedis III improvised. Working with the great drummers of the day like Chick Webb, Jo Jones, Gene Krupa, Max Roach and Buddy Rich, Avedis Zildjian III not only named but invented Crash, Ride, HiHat, Sizzle, Swish and all modern cymbals as we know them today.

Zildjian continued its intimate involvement with music through the Swing years, Dixieland, Be-Bop, Mainstream and into the age of Pop, Rock, Funk, Electric Jazz and Heavy Metal. And today the company is also one of the leading manufacturers of drum sticks in the world, owning its own fully integrated manufacturing facility in Moundeville, Alabama with direct access to extensive hickory timber holdings. This affords complete control of every facet of production from the cutting of hickory timbers to the grinding and packaging.

Craigie Zildjian recently became the first woman CEO of the Zildjian company, a family owned business and the oldest company still in business in the USA, as noted by Dunn & Bradstreet (founded in 1623 in Turkey and incorporated in the U.S. in 1929). The first factory was in Quincy and then moved to Norwell in 1972. Today, there are 112 employees in the Norwell Headquarters where they manufacture all cymbals and distribute around the world to over 100 different countries. Zildjian holds 65% of the market share around the world and has sold to all types of drummers and percussionists from the Boston Symphony, to rock bands like the Beatles and Aerosmith, to jazz greats from the 30's to the present, as well as to marching bands.

Following her father's philosophy, and that of her grandfather before him, Craigie Zildjian and the Zildjian Sound Lab technicians maintain a close relationship with today's leading drummers like Steve Gadd, Neil Peart, Vinnie Colaiuta, Dave Weckl, Dennis Chambers, Gregg Bissonette and Lars Ulrich; leading percussioists like Frank Epstein and Anthony Cirone; major universities; and top drum corps like the Blue Devils, Cavaliers and the Cadets. They listen to their music and turn their ideas into sounds.

South Shore companies taking advantage of Internet

Hingham residents Byran and Leigh Larson have launched an new Internet company, BostonHire.com

Anyone who watched this year's Super Bowl can attest to the preponderance of Internet companies which ran commercials during the broadcast.

As the number of Internet users continues to surge, new companies are lining up to take advantage of the emerging market. According to the Computer Industry Almanac, more than 110 million Americans use the Internet, up from 65 million in 1998 and 53 million in 1997.

Local businessmen and businesswomen have noticed the trend, and the South Shore has seen a number of Internet operations sprout up in the last few years.

"There's been a tremendous increase in the percentage of local businesses establishing a web presence in the last couple of years," said John Stobierski, communications manager for the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. "It's gained a lot of momentum in the last year, as traditional brick-and-mortar businesses began taking orders on-line. As customers become more comfortable with giving their credit card numbers on-line, companies are gravitating toward the Internet."

One of the graybeards of e-commerce on the South Shore is the Flying Noodle, a Hanover company which buys gourmet pastas and sauces from manufacturers and resells them through direct mail and the Internet.

Owner Raymond Lemire started The Flying Noodle in September 1995, launching the company's web site, flyingnoodle.com, in December 1995. Back then, few local companies had taken the plunge into e-commerce.

"I guess I'm kind of the grandpa of this thing around here," said Lemire, who sold luxury vacations prior to starting the Flying Noodle. "For the first two months of the web site, we had absolutely no sales at all. It was like having a beautiful storefront at the end of a dirt road which no one drives by."

To direct customers to the web site, Lemire started a pasta-of-the-month club. Customers received two pastas and two sauces a month, and kept coming back to the web site each month to check out the Flying Noodle's new items.

The idea sparked a flood of traffic to the web site. The Flying Noodle now sends out monthly e-mails to customers to inform them of new products and Lemire — known to users of the web site as the Big Parmesan — answers customer's questions himself.

The Flying Noodle has won numerous awards for its web site, including being named one of the top 100 shopping sites on the Internet by PC Computing magazine. In 1998, the web site accounted for 50 percent of the Flying Noodle's total sales. Lemire expects Internet sales to account for 85 percent of the company's revenue this year.

Lemire said operating a successful Internet company involves the same skills as operating a traditional company.

"It still comes down to running a business," he said. "You have to keep the site fresh and keep people interested, like you would with a storefront. You've got to keep in mind who your buyer is and figure out where they go on-line."

The success of companies like the Flying Noodle in generating revenues through e-commerce has convinced many other local businesses to embrace the Internet. Even for those with a wealth of computer expertise, however, starting a business web site can be a daunting task.

To meet the needs of such companies, businesses are springing up to provide the tools for establishing corporate web sites. One such company is Matrix 2000 of Braintree, which provided web hosting and design services when it began in 1996.

Last year, Matrix 2000 expanded its services to e-commerce, allowing it to provide companies with all the tools necessary to generate sales on the Internet.

"We can do all of the things a company needs for e-commerce, from building the web site, to establishing the system for taking credit card orders, to getting the necessary security certifications," said Matrix 2000 founder and president Jim Hayden. "There's a lot to it. It's more than just putting your credit card machine on-line."

Matrix 2000 began by helping local businesses to establish an advertising presence on-line. Hayden said he soon realized his business would have to provide e-commerce services.

Flying Noodle owner Raymond Lemire said he expects to generate 85 of the business revenue from the Internet

"I had a customer come in and say, 'I want to sell on my web site,'" Hayden said. "I decided right then we had to move toward being a full-service shop."

Matrix 2000 marketing director Lauren Happ said companies looking to sell on-line need to find different methods to target customers than they would with their traditional business.

"One thing that people don't realize is marketing on the Internet is very different than in the real world," Happ said. "It's a whole different ball game. We're not talking about a drive-by location. People have to find your site, and you do that through establishing a presence at strategic places on the Internet. Just because you build a site doesn't mean you'll get visitors."

Hayden said one major way to generate traffic to web sites is through search engines, such as Yahoo, Lycos, or Excite. Search engines are where a customer would go to find businesses offering certain products. An automobile shopper might type "car dealers" on a search engine, as an example.

By getting a client's name on the right search engines, Hayden said customers will be able to access their web sites more easily, generating the traffic needed to increase sales.

"We have one person whose only job is the search engine process," he said. "We can list a client's name at 400 different places on the Internet. We can then keep track of the individual web sites and see where the visitors came from."

For businesses making investments in on-line ventures, the technology must be reliable. A company depending on the Internet for half of its sales cannot afford for its web site to crash for hours at a time. To prevent that type of disaster, Cohasset-based Dream Communications provides Internet access for more than 600 business clients in the greater Boston area.

Founded by 16-year-old Aaron Sawchuk of Cohasset in 1996, DreamCom began by providing dial-up access for both residents and businesses. Aaron's father, DreamCom vice president Wayne Sawchuk, said they soon realized it would be impossible to compete in the residential market with national companies such as NetZero, which provide free internet access.

By targeting businesses, however, Wayne Sawchuk said DreamCom was able to establish its own niche in the local market.

"We provide dial-up access for the Hingham Recreation Department, the Town of Weymouth, and hundreds of businesses," Sawchuk said. "Business customers aren't going to take a chance on some free service."

DreamCom recently moved into a 250,000-square-foot facility in Somerville, allowing it to provide clients with services such as encryption, secure servers, and backup fiber routes needed for e-commerce. Sawchuk said the expansion allows the company to compete with larger internet service providers for the business of companies looking to make the move to e-commerce.

The same technology which allows DreamCom to compete with AT&T also allows local companies to compete in markets traditionally dominated by large corporations.

One such area is recruiting, where on-line job seeking sites compete with Help Wanted sections of major newspapers. Hingham's Bryan and Leigh Larson launched BostonHire.com from their home last June, and have already grown to the point they are seeking office space for their 8-month-old company.

Bryan Larson said he and Leigh saw a market for local on-line recruiting which was untapped.

"The bulk of the good job sites are primarily national," he said. "BostonHire.com will always be a site devoted to greater Boston."

According to Larson, on-line recruiting has become popular because it decreases advertising costs for employers and allows the listings to stay on a web page longer than they would in a newspaper.

Larson said giving up his job as a software developer in Waltham and starting BostonHire.com was exciting, but said starting an on-line business requires the same effort as a traditional business.

"People should be prepared to work really hard before making a decision to leave their current job and start an Internet company," he said. "It's a 24-hour-a-day job to make sure the site is up and running properly. You also have to handle the sales, accounting, and payroll aspects. It's very rewarding, but you have to be willing to wear many hats."

Hayden said stories of local Internet business success stories are likely to proliferate in the near future, as the Internet's role in the economy continues to grow.

"Over the next few years, I think everything is going to change into an internet-based economy," he said. "Stores can reduce inventories by making more things available on-line. Once you reduce inventory, you can reduce the number of clerks you have. By teaching people how the internet can reduce costs, we're going to get to that point."

What's Inside

Cashing in on consolidations: The presidents and CEOs at smaller, locally based South Shore banks say news about larger banks merging just makes their day. They say the continuing consolidations of the big banks presents them with the best opportunity ever. "Every time the big guys merge I love it," says Doug Philipsen, president of Rockland Trust Company. "It just provides an opportunity for us." Page 4

Bullish on business: Ron Zooleck relishes his role as mouthpiece for businesses in the region. In fact if he had a rooftop to shout from — he'd happily yell out his favorite message for all the world to hear. Page 5

A path to wellness: Most people wouldn't expect a top-rated hotel like the Four Seasons to dispense hospitality advice to a hospital. But in the increasingly competitive health care field — especially in the greater Boston area — how you treat patients and your reputation in the communities you serve are as important to a hospital as they are to a four-star hotel chain. South Shore Hospital in Weymouth is a case in point. Page 6

In the Pink: Marylou Sandry has become notorious as one of the South Shore's best-known self-starter success stories. In the face of mega-chain stores like Dunkin' Donuts and Starbucks popping from thin air like fruit-flies, Marylou's News has managed to dig a solid niche in the South Shore's caffeinated landscape. Page 14

Banking on mergers

Community banks cash in on consolidations

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

When Citizens Bank announced its plans to take over US Trust, no one thought too much about it at first.

That is until merchants and residents in and around Norwell Center discovered Citizens intended to close down the Norwell Center branch. They were even more aghast when they learned the bank thought everyone would be thrilled to do their banking business at Citizens' Queen Anne's Corner branch.

"Queen Anne's Corner might as well be in Boston," said Nancy Ryan, an employee at Daylily, a Norwell Center gift shop, when the impending closure was announced in October.

Other center merchants worried about the continued viability of their small business community without a bank. They were heartened when they subsequently learned that Citizens was willing to sell the branch building to Scituate Federal Savings Bank, but still concerned about the three-month gap without a bank.

Citizens' plans also included shutting down its Scituate branch and transferring those customers to Citizens' Hingham operations. Scituate customers didn't react with as much shock and dismay as their Norwell peers, perhaps because they could choose from any one of four different banks, all within easy walking distance of the now-closed Citizens' branch. Three of those banks put up banners welcoming Citizens' former customers to come bank with them.

The Citizens' consolidation experience is typical. Customers of merging banks can look forward to losing their local branch if it serves a relatively small number of customers or is located in an older building.

STAFF PHOTOS/DOUG MCFADD

Community banks are thriving amid the mega-mergers, says South Shore Savings Bank president Arthur R. Connelly.

Citizens' closings certainly foreshadowed things to come. Fleet Bank, now renamed FleetBoston in the wake of its merger with BankBoston, will be selling off 86 branches in eastern Massachusetts to Sovereign Bancorp of Pennsylvania as of June 16. Which branches remain in business after Fleet and Sovereign are done with their deal remains to be seen.

On the other hand, the presidents and CEOs at smaller, locally based banks say news about larger banks merging just makes their day.

"Every time the big guys merge I love it," says Doug Philipsen, president of Rockland Trust Company. "It just provides an opportunity for us."

Robert Gaughan of the Hingham Institution for Savings echoes his sentiments.

"The continuing consolidations of the big banks presents us with the best opportunity ever," Gaughan said. "There is good growth opportunity now with . . . the larger banks consolidating and closing branches."

By way of explanation, Gaughan said, when Citizens took over US Trust, "we opened more checking in the past few months than in recent memory."

If there's so much banking business to be done, why are the big banks in a merger mania?

According to Joe Hayes, CEO of Scituate Federal Savings Bank, it's really quite simple.

"The larger banks can't generate their own customers so they just buy up other bank's customers," Hayes explains.

Customers are finding a close relationship still exists with community banks, says John O'Connor, president of Rockland Savings Bank.

John O'Connor III of Rockland Savings Bank agrees with Hayes' analysis.

"It is easier for the large banks to grow through consolidation," he said. "They are buying a bigger share of the market."

O'Connor says the larger banks show no signs of slowing the rate at which they cannibalize one another.

"In 1988 there were 15,000 banks in the United States; today there are 10,000 banks," he said.

O'Connor, who has worked for both large and small banks, says Citizens is a typical case of the bottom-line mentality of larger banks, profit-driven banks.

"In 1988, Citizens was worth $2 billion; 12 years later it does $25 billion," O'Connor said. The secret of Citizens' success? "They've purchased nearly 20 banks."

When Citizens bought out US Trust, bank officials were faced with a large number of branches, some of which stood almost cheek by jowl with another branch of the newly combined banks. They opted to consolidate branches and eliminate the weaker performing banks or smaller branches.

"The continuing consolidations of the big banks presents us with the best opportunity ever. There is good growth opportunity now with . . . the larger banks consolidating and closing branches."

Robert Gaughan, president of Hingham In stitution for Savings

In the case of Norwell Center, Citizens expected that customers of the older bank would happily transfer their accounts to the Route 53 branch because it had an ATM machine, which the center branch did not.

It's not just the residential accounts that are flowing to the smaller banks when the big guys leave town. These banks are picking up substantial sums in small business accounts.

According to O'Connor, 90 percent of the businesses in the United States are technically small businesses. Small businesses, he adds, are defined as businesses with annual sales under $10 million.

"The larger banks are not interested in the lower end of small business accounts, which leaves that market to us," O'Connor said, adding that the big boys of the banking world "would rather have one business account with annual sales of $100 million than 10 business accounts with annual sales of $10 million each."

And there are plenty of small banks on the South Shore ready, willing and able to provide banking services for those smaller businesses. As a matter of fact, the number of small banks on the South Shore in particular, and Massachusetts in general, is somewhat unique, says Philipsen. He says there are four times as many banks in Massachusetts than there are in Connecticut. The numbers are even more dramatic when compared to regions other than New England.

"We are somewhat unprecedented," Philipsen said.

The healthy state of the banking industry on the South Shore should come as no surprise.

"Banks are mirrors of the economy in the communities in which they do business," Philipsen explained. "Southeastern Massachusetts is the fastest growing area in the United States."

That wasn't always the case, however.

"In the 1980s, there was no growth. The South Shore was not growing," he added. "There was no transportation. Restoration of the Old Colony rail line (in September 1997) opened up a whole new circumstance for us.

"I can tell you there is no question about the benefit of commuter rail," Philipsen continued. "It's an easier commute to Boston and in the other direction. The other way is what's happening – businesses don't have to be in the city to make money. Without the railroad that would not be the case."

Philipsen isn't even worried about

Put these business experts to work for you

One of most important, long-term relationships that a growing business can establish is a one-on-one relationship with a committed commercial banker. Aside from the obvious financial services, a personal banker offers advice and valuable insights on a wide range of business matters. After all, an experienced banker has a broad background that includes working with many businesses and is committed to the success of both your business and the community.

Unfortunately, with the disturbing number of bank mega-mergers here on the South Shore, it's getting harder and harder for small to medium size businesses to find a bank that can, or will give them the close attention and respect they need and deserve. Which is why Rockland Savings Bank is fast becoming such an important business resource.

Rockland Savings Bank has brought together a team of some of the best known and most respected commercial bankers on the South Shore. Bank President and CEO John O'Connor assigned Bob Petrie to establish and run the bank's entire Lending function and Tricia Dandrow was appointed to head up the Commercial Banking Division. Their combined experience, enthusiasm and long-standing dedication to the growth of the South Shore is unrivaled. Their considerable strengths are backed by a solid bank with a 132-year history of service to this community.

Their business banking services include free commercial checking and savings, cash management services, letters of credit, commercial construction loans, as well as many other services. In addition, they offer you something else: your own, experienced business banker who takes the time to get to know you and your company. They have the authority to make decisions, so approvals can be made in hours not days, and loan policies are based on relationships not formulas.

So call 781-878-5252 and ask to speak to John, Bob, or Tricia. They'll be happy to show you what the innovative involvement of a dedicated banker can do for you and your company.

the downturn in the economy that some experts are predicting. He thinks the South Shore will weather any reversal of fortunes quite well.

"That's the beautiful part of doing business in this area," he said. "And with the Old Colony railroad and other forms of transportation in place, we are in pretty good shape."

O'Connor agrees with Philipsen. He believes it's a good time to be a banker on the South Shore.

"The South Shore is a dynamic area right now and for the foreseeable future," he explained. "There is substantial economic development going on in Quincy, Braintree and Weymouth."

The strong business economy and sound real estate values in the region have all the local banks thinking expansion.

According to Arthur R. Connelly, president and CEO of South Shore Savings Bank, the smaller banks have found a real niche.

"We can thrive on the scraps the big banks leave behind," Connelly said. "We have ambitions to expand. We plan to open a branch a year for at least the next 18 months."

Asked what accounts for the solid state of their banks and whether they, too, are vulnerable to takeovers yielded some differences of opinion, depending on whether the bank is owned by its depositors, a so-called mutual bank or owned by stockholders.

O'Connor, who has worked for both large and small banks, currently heads up a mutual bank.

"We are driven by different dynamics [than stockholder-owned banks]," he said. "We exist for the benefit of our customers, rather than the profit line. We have no quarterly reports and we don't pay any dividends so we can take a longer view. We are less aggressive and can focus on serving the customer rather than the stockholders' interests."

Hayes is of the same opinion. He said Scituate Federal Savings Bank is somewhat immune to the merger mania because it's a mutual bank.

"We're not buffeted by the winds on Wall Street," Hayes said. Because the bank is not answerable to stockholders, they can afford to do things that won't yield a profit in the short run. He cites, as an example, his bank's plans to open a new branch in Green Harbor as well as the Norwell Center site.

"We couldn't do that if we were owned by stockholders because [our profit margin] won't look good for the following two quarters, he explains. "A stockholder-owned bank must show a profit every quarter."

In contrast, he says, mutual banks that switched over have been sold off or closed by boards of directors only interested in the bottom line.

That doesn't mean that mutual banks can't merge. Several local banks were formed by mergers with other banks in the region.

"We can't be taken over in an adversarial way, although the depositors could choose to merge with another bank if they wished," explains Connelly.

Gaughan and Philipsen take exception to the portrait of stockholders and boards of directors painted by their mutual bank colleagues.

Although a board of directors answerable to stockholders runs Rockland Trust, Philipsen doesn't think local banks like his are as vulnerable to takeover as the his mutually owned colleagues seem to think.

"In the first place, just because somebody wants to buy you doesn't mean you have to sell," Philipsen said. "The board has the right to sell, but we also have the right to say no."

Gaughan says his bank isn't at risk of adversarial merger, either.

"Forty percent of our stock is held by our board of directors," he said. "You can control your own destiny when the directors own that much stock."

And, say Philipsen and Gaughan, their banks have a long history in their communities and are proud of their local roots. Hingham Institution for Savings was incorporated in 1834, making it the oldest financial institution in Hingham and one of the oldest in the Commonwealth. Rockland Trust was established in 1907 and has been thriving ever since.

Mutually or stockholder-owned, the bankers all agreed that their bank's strongest asset is the personal service possible when you are small and doing business in a small town.

"I like the fact that I can have a meeting with all my employees present," Philipsen said. Rockland Trust has approximately 450 employees spread out in its 46 branches and headquarters.

O'Connor spoke for all his colleagues when he said he hoped the big banks continue to consolidate and close their smaller branch offices on the South Shore.

"We'd be glad to take their customers," he said.

South Shore Chamber CEO is bullish on business

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Ron Zooleck relishes his role as mouthpiece for businesses in the region. In fact if he had a rooftop to shout from — he'd happily yell out his favorite message for all the world to hear.

"Profit is not a four-letter word," says the president and CEO of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. "Loss is."

Ron Zooleck, chairman and CEO of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, at his desk in the chamber's offices on Miller Stile Road in Quincy.

Visionary

After just a few minutes with Zooleck, 61, it's apparent he has the energy of someone half his age. He has clearly found his calling and loves his job.

At the helm of a $1.3 million operation with 14 full-time employees and 2,800 members, Zooleck has all the ammunition he needs to get attention. And he's willing to be a thorn in the side of government to ensure that the interests of business are represented.

"Our thrust is economic development and governmental affairs — lobbying," Zooleck says. "We are all lobbyists for the business community whether we're talking locally or at the Statehouse.

"We want to tell business's side of the story and put a face on the issue."

Hard work, sweat-equity and an unbridled love of American capitalism are traits Zooleck learned as his father's knee. The son of an Albanian immigrant, Zooleck hasn't lost sight of his blue-collar roots in Waterbury, Conn., and knows that behind the logos, shop windows and corporate doors of businesses are regular folks contributing to the economy.

"Many have taken a second mortgage out on their houses and worked all their lives," he says.

The South Shore, as with the rest of the metropolitan area, is inextricably tied to Boston. Therefore, transportation such as restoration of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad or a new runway at Logan Airport are key issues that the chamber supports.

"If Boston blows away tomorrow, the South Shore would not be far behind unless we all become farmers," says Zooleck. "We are here because of the health of that city. And many businesses here are directly related to businesses there."

So by helping people get from "point A to point B," business and the economy will ultimately benefit. Therefore, Zooleck says it's ludicrous to talk about building a convention center in Boston only to have the people land someplace else, like Worcester. It's also critical that the South Shore residents have the train, which he describes as an alternate route to get in and out of Boston that will continue to spur economic development.

"Greenbush will not destroy Hingham," says Zooleck, a Hingham resident since 1978. He points out that the chamber is also pro-commuter boat and provided the impetus behind the first boat trials 22 years ago.

As the South Shore embarks on the 21st century, Zooleck says the former Naval Air Station in Weymouth, Hingham Shipyard and Fore River Shipyard in Quincy are three key economic development areas in which the chamber can play a role by giving business a voice. That will be through education and lobbying at the local and state level to help pave the way for mixed-use development at the sites.

He says the diversity of businesses on the South Shore will hold the region in good stead should there be an economic downturn.

"Over the years there's been a switch from blue-collar industry on the South Shore to a white-collar or open-collar society," Zooleck explains. "Major industries have been replaced by a diverse economic base.

"We're not impervious to a downturn, but we won't be hit as hard because of the diverse business climate."

The South Shore Chamber is no stranger at the Statehouse. On the contrary, Zooleck says educating the state about business — the vast majority of which are small operations — is a challenge.

"The overwhelming number of legislators have never signed a paycheck on payday or run a business," he says. "Our job is to educate them. We're good at it."

He explains that every tax dollar can be traced back to business, something that the Legislature tends to forget.

"Shouldn't we have a say in how it's spent?" Zooleck asks.

And as Zooleck says, what's good for business is good for you and me.

"The more business increases, the more jobs and tax money are generate and the more disposable income you and I have to do what we have to do," he says.

He admits that business is not perfect. Over the years, it's been blamed for fouling the water, polluting the air and forcing kids to work.

"It's all true and we can't change history," he says. "But businesses are the same ones cleaning up the air and water, building hospitals that come up with solutions and providing the money for research.

"We do good things."

It's that message that Zooleck takes to town halls and the Statehouse.

"We've been the whipping boy since the Industrial Revolution," he says. "We need to level the playing field."

After all, capitalism, democracy and a thriving economy can't be all bad.

"Remember the Cold War?" he asks. "Well, we won! Communism fell. The democratic process and free enterprise system won.

"And our quality of life is second to none."

Official say focus on care, service key to hospital financial health

By Ed Baker
STAFF WRITER

Most people wouldn't expect a top-rated hotel like the Four Seasons to dispense hospitality advice to a hospital.

But in the increasingly competitive health care field — especially in the greater Boston area — how you treat patients and your reputation in the communities you serve are as important to a hospital as they are to a four-star hotel chain.

South Shore Hospital in Weymouth is a case in point. The hospital sought advice from the Four Season Hotel to help make the facility patient friendly. "We brought their concepts of hospitality into this place," recalled Scott Pickard, senior associate of public affairs. "When we've surveyed people on how they were treated, they say they've been treated well."

The hospital has a friendly appeal for visitors and patients alike. It's effort on the part of the hospital staff is noticeable as soon as you arrive at the main entrance. Visitors can take advantage of the hospital's valet parking service when arriving to visit an ill family member or friend. As they enter the building, they are greeted by lobby attendants and desk receptionists.

Clean, well lighted corridors pave their way as they leave the lobby. Should they desire a quick snack or lunch, a variety of culinary delights await them in the well kept dining room. When they complete their visit, their car will be awaiting them as they leave the building.

"Few hospitals look as great as this," said hospital public affairs department director Richard A. Pozniak. "Patients are often tense and on edge when they come in. It's important to help make them comfortable."

The hospital greeted nearly 3,889 newborns last year. South Shore is expecting nearly 4,200 infants will enter the world through its maternity care this year. Pickard credited the maternity ward's large volume of births on the growing population within the region and the unit's reputation. "It's a quality of care and trust more mothers recognize," added Pozniak.

The maternity unit's reputation has been enhanced because of South Shore's collaborative relationship with Boston Children's Hospital.

"I was pleased with the attention we got, and their desire to help when I left the hospital with Regan. I felt comfortable to call up the nurses I had developed a rapport with, and ask health questions. They put me in contact with local resources. The support a new mother gets when she leaves the hospital is important. That was most comforting to me."

State treasurer Shannon O'Brien

The hospital's intense focus over the past few years to improve the quality of care and service delivered is getting some notice from state officials in high places. State treasurer Shannon O'Brien knows first-hand about the attention provided by the hospital's doctors and nurses who attended her when her daughter, Regan, who was born five weeks premature last October.

"I was pleased with the attention we got, and their desire to help when I left the hospital with Regan," recalled O'Brien. "I felt comfortable to call up the nurses I had developed a rapport with, and ask health questions. They put me in contact with local resources. The support a new mother gets when she leaves the hospital is important. That was most comforting to me."

O'Brien said South Shore has excellent educational programs for mothers with newborns. "They offer mother's courses pertaining to breast feeding, sibling classes and infant massaging. I think the community approach taken by South Shore is their biggest strength."

Pickard said the hospital's image is important only to the care they provide. "If it's only window dressing, it's not going to carry much weight."

That approach, many say, can help explain why the hospital is thriving, particularly during a period when many care-givers around the region are reducing patient services because of financial woes. South Shore recently broke ground for expanding its maternity and surgery programs through a $42 million expansion project to be completed during 2002.

"A while back there was talk of cutting back or eliminating the maternity ward here. But hospital officials felt that would be a taking a step back," said Pickard.

"We went in the opposite direction," said Paul J. Taylor, hospital senior vice president of organizational development who has served South Shore since 1991. Taylor said many hospitals in the early '90s were eliminating or reducing their maternity and pediatric sections. South Shore's decision to retain its maternity section has now enabled it to have the sixth largest maternity service within Massachusetts.

The hospital offers mothers a wide range of medical options to assist in giving birth. "Mothers can use their family doctor if they desire," said Pickard. "There still are a handful of family doctors which still deliver babies." Pickard said mothers can opt for having certified midwives assist with delivery or have registered nurses and hospital doctors help them.

The hospital also provides treatment for infants having birth complications. Infants born prematurely or with complications at South Shore can be taken to the "Level Two," unit. Neo-natologists from Boston's Children's Hospital provide round-the-clock care within the unit.

"This unit is convenient for parents," said Pozniak. "We've had mothers which have had a sick child or baby being treated in Boston transferred to South Shore so they could be close by."

O'Brien said the hospital's location and care provided within Level Two prompted her to have Regan transferred to South Shore, shortly after she was born at the Brigham & Women's Hospital. "The location of the hospital obviously played a big role with my decision to have her cared for there," recalled O'Brien.

Maternity doctors also offer the drug Synagis for infants who may be prone to becoming infected with respiratory syncytial virus or RSV. The RSV which causes minor colds in children or adults can sometimes be fatal for premature babies or at-risk infants. South Shore began giving the drug to babies at risk two years ago.

The hospital has also expanded their emergency room services and opened a larger pediatric unit as well. "We added an urgent care center," said Pickard. "This is an area which treats people with urgent, but not life-threatening needs such as eye injuries, muscle strains, or work related injuries."

The urgent care center opened for patient care nine months ago. "It allows us to get people treated more quickly. We've enhanced the medical staff with nurse practitioners which compliment and serve under the doctor's supervision."

Pickard said the urgent care service helps lessen the demand on the main emergency room treatment area which handles life-threatening cases.

The hospital also opened a pediatric unit in April to meet the increasing volumes of young patients seeking care within the emergency room. "We anticipate seeing more than 15,000 kids in a single year," said Pickard. "The hospital staff determined we could serve the population better by creating a unit for children staffed with its own doctors and nurses."

Pickard said the hospital's partnership with Children's Hospital enables South Shore to have a pediatrician affiliated with Children's on site daily, around the clock. "The doctors here are certified in pediatric medicine and have emergency training," said Pickard.

People often use Children's Hospital as a measuring tool when considering health care for their children, Pickard said. "This is the only community hospital in the state that features dedicated space for the emergency care of children," he said. "Parents used to have to go into Boston to get the treatment which is now offered here."

The pediatric unit is cheerily attractive to young children. Pleasant pictures on the walls gaze upon the unit's young patients. "The unit was designed with the parents and children in mind. There are televisions in the rooms," said Pickard. "The unit enables both parent and child to avoid waiting treatment within the main emergency room waiting area. If you have a crying child in an emergency room, it can raise the frustration level for the parent whose waiting with the child."

Pickard said children having life-threatening cases are still treated within the emergency room and can be transferred easily to Children's Hospital should they need specialized care South Shore might not have available.

The hospital also has a collaborative relationship with Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital as well. This agreement has helped South Shore's cancer treatment programs provide care which was once only available at various Boston hospitals. "We can now provide a level of care here, rather then send people into a setting which they are not familiar with," said Pozniak. South Shore has a stereo-tactic biopsy unit which helps diagnose breast cancer. There's also a new gynecologic oncology program for women with ovarian, cervical and endometrial cancers. These services were once only available through Brigham & Woman's or Massachusetts General Hospital.

Pickard said the hospital's cancer treatment program allows women to remain in one health care program instead of getting bounced from hospital to hospital. "The patient is not being burrowed around the health care system," said Pickard.

South Shore hopes to offer cardiac surgery within a few years as well. "State law doesn't allows us to do that now. Patients generally have to go to Massachusetts General Hospital or New England Medical Center for that."

The hospital does have a congestive heart clinic which was recently expanded along with an outpatient diabetes center. Pozniak said these programs are helping patients to remain healthy. "There's a specialized nurse which provides nutrition and exercise advice. Patients can learn to live a better quality life. The staff in that unit works with a cardiologist, and the patient's primary care doctor. We're one of a few hospitals within the state with this type of program." Pozniak said the program tries to help patient family members learn the symptoms of their disease so they can better assist them as well."

South Shore's expansion comes during a period when many care-givers are operating with budget shortfalls. The hospital is owed nearly $4.1 million from Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, which is now under state control. South Shore is also anticipating a $27 million cutback from Medicare payments within the next four years. But the hospital is still operating in the black. South Shore's operating expenses for last year totaled more than $178 million.

The hospital had nearly $7.9 million in excess funds last year. Pozniak credits hospital CEO David T. Hannan's management skills for enabling South Shore to remain financially stable. "It's a testament to the management of his office," said Pozniak. "He can anticipate shortfalls and obstacles such as reduced Medicare payments and how the balanced budget amendment will affect us. He can also anticipate reductions from HMO's."

Taylor said South Shore's challenge these days centers around issues pertaining to their growth. "We're growing at a time when many health care providers are retreating. We have our problems coping with the health care system and payments. But we've been able to provide an oasis within the system."

"You'd have to be hard pressed to find a hospital adding a $42 million expansion project during this turbulent health era," said Pozniak. "As more patients choose us, we're going to have to come up with ways to care for them."

"To have this superior resource in your backyard is very reassuring," said O'Brien.

Unemployment in the state is at record lows and job growth is at record highs. So is there a downside to the up economy in Massachusetts?

According to statistics from the state Division of Employment and Training, more Massachusetts residents were working in January 2000 than ever before.

Which leads one to wonder, what are all those help wanted signs for?

Owners and managers of skating rinks, fast-food restaurants, dry-cleaners, farm stands and all sorts of South Shore businesses are raising wages, being creative in their hiring, picking up the slack themselves — or a combination of all three.

"It's the tightest labor market I've seen," says Larry Ruth, manager of Wendy's on Route 139 in Marshfield that employs about 31 people and pays from $6.40-$7.50 an hour. Ruth, who is a familiar sight working side by side with his employees, says he's fully staffed right now. But a few months ago, it was a different story that even generous signing bonuses couldn't solve.

> manager of Wendy's in Marshfield

"We offered bonuses of $100 to $300 that people didn't bat an eyelash at," he said. "It didn't make a difference."

Elliot Winer, chief economist with the DET, said the tight labor market means that workers have more opportunities to pick and choose between hours and situations that are more to their liking.

"It's not just the pay," Winer said. "But working conditions that are flexible."

Robert Dwyer of Cohasset-based Dwyer's Cleaners says it's a lot tougher to attract high school students, who make up a lot of his part-time staff, to work than ever before. He says that with minimum wage at $6 an hour, teenagers don't have to work as many hours for their spending money.

"Finding high school-age employees is a lot different than it was," Dwyer said. "Kids have a lot more activities and they can make $50-$60 a week in just a few hours."

Squares going in circles

Some downtowns are thriving while others struggle

By Julie Ann Nevero
STAFF WRITER

With the option of discount, chain and department stores it's a wonder people would want to shop anywhere else. Still, downtown squares are considered intricate parts of their communities and have remained successful by dazzling patrons with quality service and originality.

When walking up the creaking-wood stairs to a shop door in Hingham Square, you get the sense you are about to enter someone's home, rather than a store. Colorfully painted store signs, curtain-draped windows, and welcome mats help convey the shops' house-like qualities.

Hingham Square features more than 20 shops, each offering something a bit unique, according to Business Association president and Gifted Hand owner Maria O'Donnell.

Nanette Wilson, owner of La Petite Maison, said her fine imported linens are the only available on the South Shore. "To find items of this quality, people would have to drive out to Chestnut Hill," she said. "[My store] provides a great opportunity for people who want good-quality linens."

The bright colors bursting from the display window at ZuZu, located across the street, make the shop almost impossible to overlook. ZuZu takes old furniture and makes it new, painting in powerful blues, oranges, pinks, and greens. Co-owner Robin Aborn said most of the pieces are bought at flea markets. Some are repainted, while others are left as is and are dressed up with the shop's own colorfully hand-painted knobs.

Allowing customers to get involved with their purchases is a big part of what makes square shops successful, Wilson said. "This being a linen shop, customers need to see and touch the products," she said. Wilson has three beds set up in the shop so customers can do just that.

To preserve its relationship with the community, Hingham Square shop owners host a variety of events during the year, according to O'Donnell. "We have an Octoberfest, a Summerfest, sidewalk sales and host Christmas in the Square," she said. "It's a way to thank customers for their service."

Shirley Square in Plymouth shares similar success. With more than 75 shops, the area currently has no vacancies, according to Tom O'Rourke of the Plymouth Area Chamber of Commerce. "It's vibrant," he said. "For the past couple of years it's taken on a new life."

"Most people have old perceptions of downtown areas and may have written it off. When they do make their way down to the square, I think most are pleasantly surprised."
Tom O'Rourke of the Plymouth Area Chamber of Commerce

With old-fashioned brick sidewalks and black-iron light posts, O'Rourke said people enjoy the square's "uniqueness and that it's near the seaside."

Plymouth has been traditionally marked by the chamber as a tourist area with the waterfront and Plimouth Plantation, O'Rourke said. "We're finding now that we have a new angle and that's shopping."

O'Rourke said Shirley Square does have a strong tie to the community, yet remains undiscovered to others. "Most people have old perceptions of downtown areas and may have written it off. When they do make their way down to the square, I think most are pleasantly surprised," he said.

It is for these reasons Scituate resident Ann Grote said she shops local squares. "I never go to the mall," she said. The squares are closer and the "boutique-type" shops have more to offer, Grote added. "Here, people care about what they do."

Still some shops are feeling the burn left by the more mainstream stores. North Scituate Village's Gates Clothing Store left behind an 83-year legacy when its doors closed in February 1998. "That old family-type [clothing] store is probably long gone," owner Lawrence Gates said in an interview. With today's tight economy, people are easily enticed by the sales and promotions put on by department stores like Filene's and Macy's, he added. After spending a year on the market, the near 8,000-square-foot property finally found a tenant last month.

Sewer inadequacies have plagued Webster Square in Marshfield for many years. The area has a number of vacancies and is littered with stores that can be found anywhere else. "Our septic problems make it very difficult to attract quality businesses," said Lou Ricci of the Marshfield Chamber of Commerce.

Ricci said a group was formed in 1995 and has already drawn up plans to revamp the square, but nothing can happen until the sewer line is extended. Providing the plan is accepted at an upcoming town meeting, Ricci said the project would take three years to complete.

Nearby Cohasset Village has its own share of problems. Four years ago, shop owners began noticing a lack of stability in the village. Vacant shops were staying empty and newcomers were not sticking around. The Village Revitalization Task Force was formed and is currently proposing a $10 million to $15 million revitalization effort to "bring the village back to life," according to its chairman, Dean Rizzo. The three-prong approach will address infrastructure needs, aim to bury utility lines underground, and develop a Harborwalk to link the village to the harbor.

"We're looking to improve business in the village and enhance the environment around it," Rizzo added.

Looking beyond the village's more colonial-style shop fronts one can catch a glimpse of the future. A newly renovated Red Lion Inn, equipped with a restaurant and bar, jazz club, spa, and 15 luxury suites, is anticipated for next month and is expected to attract more patrons to the area.

Sue Strahley, a 21-year village veteran, said she recognizes the village's weaknesses but said it has always maintained a close relationship with the community. "Everybody could use more business, but the village is the heart of the town," the Cards and Shards owner said.

Village newcomer Ellen Brown, owner of the Cohasset Greenery, runs two flower shops in downtown areas and said she wouldn't want to be anywhere else. "I have always loved the village," said Brown, who opened early last month. "I think there is a nice market down here." The Hingham Greenery has been in Hingham Square for six years.

Of the many things squares offer, shop owners agreed the one-on-one, personal service they provide is the most important.

"In malls, the faces [of employees] change," Aborn said. "I think customers like to come in and see the same person behind the desk. It's more welcoming."

"Some of the best friends of my life I met through my business," said Strahley. "Malls have anchors, we have heart."

Read purchase reunites family for another business venture

For brother Lou and Anthony Nickinello and their sister Marie Mitchell, family business has been a way of life since childhood.

Over the years, each of the siblings — in one way or another — has managed to maintain a hand in several family business ventures and pursue other professional avenues. With the purchase of the Rockland-based Read Sand & Gravel, the Natick natives are joining forces once again.

"It was business at the kitchen table," said Lou Nickinello, the designated family spokesman.

It all began when Anthony Nickinello, the father of the trio, and Mitchell, opened a plumbing business in Natick in the 1940s and subsequently began construction, real estate and equipment rental ventures.

"The only thing (our parents) ever said to us was stay together. 'Be together as brothers and sisters. Once you do that, everything falls into place,' " said Nickinello.

And the trio is staying together in every sense of the word. While each plays a unique role — Lou Nickinello is president and director of operations, Anthony Nickinello is director of marketing and sales, and Marie Mitchell is director of finance — the co-owners' business cards list names and not titles to maintain a sense of family. All business decisions and agreements must be unanimous, Nickinello said.

The three bring to the table a wide range of experience: Lou Nickinello is a former state representative from Natick; he served on the transportation committee for 12 years, eight of which he was chairman. He was defeated by U.S. Sen. John Kerry in a 1982 bid for lieutenant governor. For 27 years, Nickinello has managed Bass River Sports in Yarmouth, a family-owned seasonal business on Cape Cod. His brother, Anthony Nickinello, recently retired from the San Jose, California's building department and sister, Marie Mitchell, has worked for the family real estate business, Nickinello Realty.

The Nickinellos and Mitchell found out about the potential sale of Read Sand & Gravel through word-of-mouth. At the time, Lou Nickinello said he and his siblings were looking for a business venture together.

In Read, they liked what they saw.

"We liked what Bill Read did creating his niche. Today if you have a niche and can reinforce that niche, you can be highly profitable and successful. Basically, he did that," Nickinello said.

That niche, the custom soil market, along with landscape material sales, has earned Read Sand & Gravel its strong reputation and a place as a forerunner in the business along the South Shore and beyond. The company grosses about $6 million each year.

"We believe what Bill Read did was good. We bought what he did. He took it to a certain level. We want to take it to the next level," Nickinello said. "There was one of him. There are three of us. He built a good reputation. But when you stay still, you go backwards. When a person says, 'We do this because we've always done this,' that means they're in neutral. I want the person who says, 'Let's find a better way.' "

Nickinello said ALM Custom Soils has no plans in the works for new sites, but plans to "reinforce what we have going in southeastern Massachusetts," and expand the company's Bourne office.

"We'll improve that. We'll be open 12 months a year (instead of seasonal). There are a lot of customers on the Cape . . . The Cape is a very strong foot-hold to us," Nickinello said. Read Sand & Gravel will supply the soil for Bayberry Golf Course, the course in Yarmouth that was recently built over a landfill.

In that vein, Nickinello said the company will continue to increase its business by way of turf management, golf courses and beyond.

"The golf course business is going away," he said, adding other sports ventures are desirable.

"We want to do more on every level. We have the product. People need it and we want to sell it," Nickinello said.

ADVERTISER PROFILE

The Big Dig®, Brigham's style

Big Dig® Sundae Parties are popular because they can accommodate virtually any size group, and they are affordable. What do the nation's largest road construction project and Brigham's Ice Cream have in common? Two things for starters, one, they are both called The Big Dig, and two, they're bot generating a great deal of interest.

"The Big Dig®, Brigham's Style" was merely a humorous billboard campaign designed by Joe Higgins of Higgins Advertising, Beverly, when it debuted the summer of '97 on downtown Boston's Central Artery. Since then the name has been trademarked, a huge sundae in Brigham's restaurants has been added and a new ice cream flavor was developed, all under the name "The Big Dig." So just when you thought it was safe to get into your car and go to the office, now there is a sundae party designed specifically for office workers ... naturally it's called a Brigham's Big Dig® Sundae Party.

Downtown Brigham's locations have been doing office sundae parties for years, but since the introduction last year of the Big Dig theme, now available at all 29 Brigham's locations in the Greater Boston area, the popularity of the sundae parties is escalating.

Obviously Brigham's is happy, but Boston area offices are cheering as well. One recent customer raved, "Everything was great, it was so easy, we'd love to do this again." Another customer praised the program by saying, "We had to pick ourselves up off the floor, it was so much fun. Fantastic!" In the battle of fighting office boredom, managers and employees agree that Brigham's sundae parties are a great way to break things up and lift office morale.

"Brigham's Big Dig® Sundae Parties are a fun, easy option for an office party, and a key to their success is that they are as effortless as ordering a pizza," said Darryln Leikauskas, director of restaurant marketing at Brigham's. "Our sundae party always brings smiles to people's faces. Business managers love the idea because it's a great way to thank the team for their hard work, and salespeople love it because it's a great way to thank customers for their business."

Big Dig® Sundae Parties are popular because they can accommodate virtually any size group, from a minimum of 30 to over 2,000 employees, and they are affordable. One phone call to Brigham's headquarters will put the customer in touch with a sundae party coordinator. The customer then chooses the ice cream and sauce flavors, and Brigham's handles the rest, including toppings, paper goods, scoops and ladles, a tablecloth, and a little toy construction truck for a centerpiece.

Most Brigham's locations deliver and set up the self-serve "buffet," so there's virtually nothing for the office to do but enjoy it. Best of all, unlike the "real" Big Dig, with costs spiraling into the billions, as your own project gets bigger, the per person cost for a Big Dig® Sundae Party actually goes down! Prices start at just $3.95 per person. Now that's a sweet deal that most businesspeople can get excited about.

For more information about hosting your own Brigham's Big Dig® Sundae Party, call 1-800-BRIGHAM (1-800-274-4426) or visit the Web site at www.brighams.com.

South Shore restaurants dish up right ingredients for success

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Restaurants on the South Shore are cooking up new ideas to determine the right recipe for success.

So forget the frozen pizzas, the three-minute microwave chicken dinners, and the tacos because there is good news — the people of the South Shore are developing more sophisticated palates, and the area's restaurants are getting better and growing in number as well.

Carol Zaremba and Bond Benjamin, who own Boca restaurant on Route 139 in Pembroke, said they believe the restaurant industry continues to grow on the South Shore and is catering to more sophisticated palates.

"With everyone being so wrapped up with work these days," said Zaremba, who handles most of the business details regarding the operation of Boca, and Benjamin is the chef at the establishment. "More and more people are eating out. And with that happening, more restaurants are coming, and they keep getting better. I think growth is good."

Benjamin added, "There's plenty to go around. But now there's more pressure to be different. Fusion is good, because I feel you have to mix it up. You can always use the same ingredients you've been using, but it's good to try to use them in different ways."

Quality food and hard work are key ingredients, says Benjamin. "You have to have good help that cares about what they're doing, right down to the dishwasher. You can be the smartest person on the face of the earth, but if you don't have a good staff providing good service, it's over."

Zaremba said in addition to good food, help, and service, it helps to have a "nice atmosphere" where people can unwind and get comfortable. She added one of the most important aspects of the restaurant business is that owners of restaurants should always be available to their customers.

"I think you always have to be there when customers come," Zaremba said. "The regular customers look for you, and they appreciate the owners of the establishment being on hand. It makes them comfortable. It's easy to fail in this business. I've seen a lot of restaurants go down the tubes. It's a business where you can't just walk away all the time."

Ming Tsai, a celebrity chef who hosts TV's "East Meets West" on cable's Food Network, and is a Needham resident, says Boston and South Shore dining is clearly changing and getting more competitive.

Tsai, originally from Ohio, came to Wellesley three years ago and founded his restaurant Blue Ginger there. But the main reason Tsai started his restaurant in the Boston area is because he felt the area would not threaten his business with a lot of competition.

Now, three years later, Tsai feels the Boston area as a whole, including the South Shore, is undergoing a metamorphosis.

"I think the area is becoming one of the culinary arts centers of the world," Tsai said. "In the last few years, there's been an influx of great restaurants around here. And I think they're going to keep on coming."

Tsai said there are many reasons why the restaurant business in the area is booming, but he noted one of the main reasons is because today's chefs are getting more experimental with the foods they are creating.

"People's palates are more sophisticated these days," Tsai said. "People today want value, and they want something different."

Kurt Hochkeppel is trying to give the people of the South Shore something different at Atlantica in Cohasset, where he is the general manager. Hochkeppel noted the restaurant was founded by Peter Roy, and in addition, he praised the culinary skills of Atlantica's chef, Erik Stenfors.

"Atlantica is a restaurant which has four major parts to it: it has an elegant dining area which serves "world view cuisine," a pub and grille serving traditional American cuisine, and it has an extensive bar as well. In addition, Atlantica has a function hall which seats 175 people.

"The restaurant basically gives people four points of view under one roof," Hochkeppel said, noting the concept is one of the main attractions of the establishment. "We're trying to bring a fresh outlook to the South Shore and update the foods available in this area, and present the public with some new continental flavors."

Hochkeppel said high quality food is what brings a majority of the restaurant's customers through the door, but he said a major part of Atlantica's attraction has to do with its location.

"We probably have the best view on the South Shore," Hochkeppel said, noting the restaurant is situated directly on Cohasset Harbor. "We try to match our cuisine to the height of the landscape which in turn lets the customer have a great dining experience."

Hochkeppel said he feels one of the most important aspects of the restaurant business is "being able to adapt to people's tastes," as they are ever changing. He noted Atlantica changes its menu on a seasonal basis.

"You have to change along with your customers," he said, "and that's why we change the menu. The public's tastes are changing daily, monthly, and yearly."

Hochkeppel said restaurants who have not "got a name" yet are more apt these days to establish hooks or gimmicks, but noted the quality of a restaurant's food, first and foremost, is what attracts customers.

"If you serve people quality meals," he said, "they'll return. And with the ever growing sense of competition around here, quality is more important than ever. It's a fun business to be in. You have to ride the ups and downs and be able to adapt to different markets."

As to the future of the restaurant business on the South Shore Hochkeppel said, "Younger people are coming here and putting down their roots. I think it's only going to get better. There's a lot of quality on the South Shore right now, and there's nowhere to go but up."

One of those young people putting down their roots is Kevin Long, the 24-year-old chef at Tosca, on North Street in Hingham.

Long has been a chef for the past six years. He cooked at Tosca when he first started, then he left almost a year ago, went to Boston, and opened a restaurant called "Aquitaine," which Tsai gave rave reviews.

Long returned to Tosca about 10 months ago and now, he is comfortable where he is. Long, like other restaurateurs, feels the South Shore is becoming a great area to be in the restaurant business.

Long has worked with renown chefs as such as former Tosca cook Ken Oringer, and he has also worked with Atlantica's Stenfors, as Stenfors used to be a chef at Tosca as well.

Long noted Tosca has been a very prosperous establishment for the past

A sumptuous entree waiting to be enjoyed.

7 years it has been in existence, but he said the South Shore is getting more competitive, so being innovative as a chef is the key these days.

"The South Shore has come a long way in the food business," he said. "Restaurants are providing upscale, high-quality products for an ever-learning restaurant clientele."

Long said he puts in long hours which not only include cooking, but also paperwork and other organizational activities.

"This business depends on people's drives," he said. "You cannot be complacent. It takes long hours, and a lot of effort from everyone involved. Being successful in this business takes a combination of good planning, good food, a good location, and a good concept. If someone has a bad dinner, they'll remember where it was, no matter what kind of reputation that restaurant may have."

As to the status of the restaurant business on the South Shore, Long said it is amazing.

"I hope it keeps getting better," Long said. "Customers will play a big part in that. The more they know about food, the more they will demand from us. The more they demand from us, the better, and more creative we'll be."

Creativity is in the heart and soul of the people at Fujiyama, a Japanese restaurant in Norwell.

At Fujiyama, sushi and other Japanese dishes are created in front of given customers' eyes with an large amount of flair, skill, and precision. Bob Sein, the restaurant's owner, said he has a market for his product because there are very few places to get sushi on the South Shore.

"All of our food is different from all the other restaurants," Sein said. "It's for people who want to try something different."

Sein said an important part of his business is word-of-mouth advertising, but like the other representatives from the other restaurants, he noted "The food is the most important part."

"We all work very hard," he added, "very long hours. You have to do both of those things to be successful."

He said for the time being, he is not so concerned with competition because he is doing something entirely different than most restaurants on the South Shore.

"We have a good economy right now," Tsai added. "People have more money to spend, and in turn, more money to go out to eat. But at the same time, people are getting more demanding."

Tsai has some advice for people thinking of opening a restaurant. "Don't open a restaurant thinking the first couple of months don't matter. You've got to be ready to blow them away the instant you open your doors."

Building a business from the basement up

Tedeschi operation stays close to its roots, family values

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

If not for a tiny "bug," the South Shore's biggest family business empire might never have been built.

The year was 1923 and Angelo Tedeschi, a finish cobbler at one of Rockland's shoe factories, was working at a Brockton Fair exhibition.

Visionary

"It was brutally hot," says Terry Tedeschi, one of Angelo's many grandchildren. "He became ill with pneumonia."

Facing a lengthy recuperation, Angelo knew he needed to do something to feed his wife, Katherine, and his children. Angelo decided to import cheeses and other foods that the Italian community in Rockland might want to purchase. He converted his cellar into a stockroom and delivered the goods to his customers.

"That's how we got into the food business," Terry Tedeschi explains.

Seventy-seven years later, the Tedeschi business is bigger but it hasn't moved far from its roots.

Angelo's little import business soon outgrew the Belmont Street basement. Angelo was moving up in the business world – up from the basement and into his garage.

He remodeled the one-car garage, adding doors, windows, shelves and counters and a sign over the entrance announcing that you were about to enter "Tedeschi's."

The little market did a box-office business. Demand dictated an ever-expanding product line. Angelo even taught himself the now-dying art of meat cutting.

Call it another chapter in the American dream. Angelo had been born in southern Italy and immigrated to the United States when he was about 12. He married a New York girl, Katherine Sabino, whose parents had also been immigrants from Italy and moved to Rockland, then a thriving suburb of Brockton, known for its shoe and leather industry.

Angelo's children, Ralph D., Dominic, Etta, William and Robert, worked alongside their parents in the little market.

"They grew up delivering groceries."

When Ralph Tedeschi came home from the war, he took over management of the family grocery. It wouldn't be long before Ralph got "a better idea." He believed that if you provided a wide array of choices in a clean environment, customers would flock to the store. He tested out his theory by building a stand-alone supermarket directly across the street from the family home. The new market stood on the corner of Market and Howard streets.

From the mid-1940s through the 1950s, the Tedeschi supermarket chain flourished. In addition to the Rockland store, Ralph Tedeschi opened supermarkets in Hanover, Plymouth, Braintree, Brockton, Cohasset and Hull.

"They were owned and operated by Ralph Tedeschi with the loving help of his entire family, his siblings, his parents and his sister's husband," says Terry Tedeschi. "It was a complete family affair."

In the 1950s, Tedeschi launched the Tedeschi Realty Company.

That was spawned out of a desire to build the markets and own the land where they were being built. The wisdom of that decision wouldn't fully emerge until years later.

There was another impetus behind starting the realty company.

"Dominic had a particular flair for construction," Terry Tedeschi said of his uncle. "Ralph took care of the retail end and the vision, while Dominic constructed the actual buildings."

Ralph Tedeschi often said that the secret of his success was so simple that it scared him, Terry Tedeschi said. That philosophy of business could be boiled down to "Listen to your customers. Give them what they want, not what the corporation thinks they should buy."

In addition to stressing the importance of an immaculate building and choices, Ralph Tedeschi emphasized service. Employees were encouraged to smile and interact with customers. Tedeschi hired "bundle boys" to package the groceries customers bought and help them get it to their cars.

"It was all customer focused and customer driven," Terry Tedeschi said. "My father wanted customers to see that we put our heart and soul into it. He said if we give them service, cleanliness, a smile and treat them fairly and everything else would take care of itself."

Tedeschi's list of business rules also included the belief that if you provided a customer with the special orders they requested – even if it meant you kept a case in the stockroom and only sold one can or bottle in a month – it would more than pay for itself.

A dynasty: The Tedschi clan includes (seated) Angelo, Ralph (standing) Will, Charlie, Nick and Bob.

"Now I have a customer for life," Ralph Tedeschi would tell his employees.

By 1961, Tedeschi's Supermarkets were a hot commodity. The operation set the standard for the industry and reaped the rewards.

"They had the highest volume per square foot of any store in the country," Terry Tedeschi said. And that quickly drew the attention of Stop & Shop, another established chain that wanted to expand into the South Shore area. The company made Ralph an offer he couldn't resist. Although Tedeschi sold the business, consisting of six supermarkets, to Stop & Shop, he held onto ownership of the buildings themselves and the land and became the second largest stockholder behind Sidney Rabb, owner of Stop & Shop.

"To their credit, they kept the key people in the operation," said Terry Tedeschi. "Ralph and his brothers and Etta's husband, Charlie Fitzgibbons were all working for Stop & Shop."

Not only was Tedeschi Stop & Shop's new landlord, Tedeschi Realty Co. became Stop & Shop's builder for the new stores the company added. It wouldn't take long, however, for the differences in retail styles to become more than a mere annoyance. As Terry Tedeschi explains it, Stop & Shop got to call all the shots and it believed in doing business differently.

Ralph Tedeschi founded his business by offering nothing but national brands and as many of them as his customers wanted. Stop & Shop believed in store brands.

"Ralph and his brothers had a different philosophy," says Terry Tedeschi. "It was a combination of things. And Stop & Shop was a mature chain with its own ways of doing things."

In 1963, the Tedeschis and Stop & Shop came to an amicable parting of the ways. The Tedeschis and their in-laws left Stop & Shop with an agreement that Stop & Shop would own the Tedeschi Supermarket name and that the Tedeschis would not directly compete for business against Stop & Shop in their future endeavors. The breakup did not rupture the working relationship between Tedeschi Realty Co. and Stop & Shop. And, of course, the Tedeschis still owned and leased out many of the actual buildings Stop & Shop Supermarkets occupied.

Terry Tedeschi put it mildly when he said of the Tedeschi businesses and Stop & Shop, "We've crossed paths many times since then."

The one thing Ralph and the rest of the family didn't bank on was how hard it would be to leave the grocery business. It was, you might say, in their blood. Just one year after the split, the Tedeschis bought a floundering supermarket in Holbrook from Stop & Shop, renamed the market in honor of their father and started Angelo's Supermarket Inc.

This time, all of the siblings and in-laws were equal partners. Robert Tedeschi was named president. Other principals in the day-to-day operations were Charlie Fitzgibbons and later Will Tedeschi. Ralph was content being chairman of the board because it freed him to pursue other interests, including travel. He split his time between Tara, his Norwell home, and a house in Florida.

The Tedeschi's operated under the motto "Home of the People Pleasers." Once again, their store took off and they decided to expand operations. Because of the non-competitive clause in their agreement with Stop & Shop, they decided to set up shop on Cape Cod.

The Cape was stilling somewhat of a sleepy backwater back then, Terry Tedeschi says. The Tedeschi felt that wouldn't always be the case.

In rapid order, they added stores in Yarmouth, Dennis, Harwich, Wareham, Hyannis, Orleans and Sandwich.

Between the 1960s and 1970s, Angelo's Supermarkets became a formidable chain. It still wasn't enough. In 1972, the Tedeschi family bought out the Curtis Food chain of six supermarkets and 25 convenience stores, primarily based in the Hingham, Quincy, and Scituate area of the South Shore.

The Tedeschis changed the name of the newly acquired supermarkets to Angelo's, but continued to operate the convenience stores under the name Curtis Compact for the next 15 years.

Over the ensuing years, the Angelo's chain would grow to 18 supermarkets. Their success drew the attention of a New Jersey company. In 1986, that company made the Tedeschis another offer they couldn't refuse. They sold their Angelo's Supermarkets to Supermarkets General Corp., owners of both Pathmark and Purity Supreme, for $27 million.

John Ransom, another Tedeschi in-law and president of Tedeschi Food Shops/Li'l Peach, said of the sale, "The family decided the time was right to sell."

One of the incentives was the changing business climate. The rise of the super stores was making it increasingly difficult for smaller supermarkets to compete for customers and market share.

The advantage for Supermarkets General was that it gave them an immediate, established presence in New England. The company erred, however, in changing the name of the stores to Purity Supreme.

"They were never able to get a strong hold in this market," said Terry Tedeschi. "Taking Angelo's name off the market was not a good move."

In one of those ironic twists of history, Stop & Shop bought out Purity Supreme several years later, and then, in turn, was bought out by Royal Ahold, a multi-national corporation headquartered in The Netherlands, in 1996.

"There has been a significant consolidation in the supermarket business in the last few years," Terry Tedeschi explains. "The Europeans are a major consolidator of the American supermarket industry. Sainsbury of Britain owns Shaw's, which bought out Star. A&P is owned by a German company and Hannaford Brothers was just bought out by another European company that also owns the Food Lion chain."

With the sale of Angelo's Supermarket, Inc., there was another changing of the guard. Brothers Bob, Nick and Will decided to join Ralph in retirement and pass the reins of business to the next generation of Tedeschis.

The family retained ownership of the convenience stores.

"We were out of the supermarket business and back to convenience stores," says Terry Tedeschi. "Our first store started out with 2,500 square feet, about the size that would be called a convenience store today."

The connection to their roots goes even stronger — the Tedeschi businesses are managed from a building basically across the street from the old family homestead and still going strong.

The next generation opted to change the family convenience store business name to Tedeschi Food Shops, Inc. Its Curtis Compact stores were renamed Tedeschi Food Shops as well, since Stop & Shop only bought the Tedeschi Supermarket name.

The food business wasn't the only one thriving.

In the 1980s and 1990s, the realty business expanded into building commercial properties such as supermarket and drug stores, and subdivisions. Other family partnerships, established for limited operations, are also managed out of the Tedeschi headquarters in Rockland.

While other family owned businesses fall apart over family squabbles, as in the case of the DeLuca market and the Demoulas chain, the Tedeschis remain an incredibly close-knit family. If Angelo is counted as the first generation, there are 25 members in the third generation and 50 in the fourth. There are a handful of great-grandchildren and a strong likelihood of further expansion in that division as well.

Of the 25 members of that third generation, 23 live within 15 minutes of each other, predominately in Norwell and the surrounding communities.

The diversity of family holdings — there are about 70 trusts or partnerships that come together for limited business purposes — means everyone in the family, spouses included, can find a niche for their talents if they choose. Most choose to remain "in the business." The most notable exception is Susan Tedeschi, whose musical career as a blues belter has taken off big-time. This month she was one of five nominees for a Grammy award in the best new artist category. Susan is Nick's granddaughter.

Strawberry Fair

"The Strawberry Fair restaurant in Norwell is anything but. Perhaps they should rename it "Strawberry Excellent." Aside from their outstanding breakfast and weekend brunch, this place serves up great lunches and dinners."

Best Bet: Just take your pick!

Roast pork loin on bed of caramelized onions gave new meaning to the "other white meat." Cheese tortellini with sundried tomatoes is incredibly brilliant. Phantom raves about the Artichoke and parmesan bake [appetizer] served with warm bread and crackers, and the baked brie. Homemade honey wheat bread with strawberry butter is flat-out the best the Phantom has EVER tasted.

[Portions are sized such that] you'll feel guilty that you can't finish your whole meal. German chocolate cake was a very fitting conclusion. [The waitress] was extremely congenial, and even though this place is on Route 3, it could be in the middle of rural Vermont. It feels like a bed and breakfast with out the bedrooms, down home and rustic.

Easily located off exit 14 on Route 3, at the junction of 228 and 53, Strawberry Fair features superb sustenance at "fair" prices.

NO BUILDING? NO PROBLEM!

SOUTH SHORE SISTERS WILL BUILD MASSIVE TEMPORARY BUILDING TO HOUSE SOUTH SHORE HOME SHOW

MARCH 9, 2000--Before the creation of the South Shore Home Show, the lack of an adequate convention hall on the South Shore prevented the region from ever hosting any of its own large-scale trade shows and conventions, thereby forcing area residents to travel to Boston to take part in such events. That all changed when Jill Daly and Kim Kelly, founders of Atlantic Show Group, launched the hugely successful home show last year.

"We decided that if we couldn't find a facility large enough to hold a big-time home show," Daly explained, "we would just have to build one ourselves." Daly and Kelly, who are sisters, have arranged the construction of a massive 50,000 square foot temporary structure on the Marshfield Fairgrounds to house the 2000 South Shore Home Show, which will be held March 30 through April 2.

The use of Clear Span Temporary Structures, as these buildings are known, is an innovative new concept within the show industry that is finding success across the country in markets lacking a facility suitable for large events. With professional heating, air conditioning, lighting, carpeting, and other amenities, the building will closely resemble a more traditional convention center. It will be assembled the week before the show.

The South Shore Home Show was held in a similar 32,000 square foot structure in 1999, the show's inaugural year. Response from visitors and exhibitors was so positive that Atlantic Show Group has increased the size of the event by 50% this year. More than 150 businesses will staff 300 booths in the 132 x 310 foot structure. Daly and Kelly expect 20,000 people to attend.

Daly and Kelly began working on the show in 1998 after their research demonstrated the need and demand for such a show within their home community. Originally from Weymouth, Daly and Kelly now live in Kingston, where their business is headquartered. They placed the show at the Marshfield Fairgrounds, which annually draws more than 100,000 people as the site of the Marshfield Fair, because it is centrally located on the South Shore and because it is an extremely well known destination.

MAJOR HOME SHOW COMES TO SOUTH SHORE

AT LONG LAST, SOUTH SHORE RESIDENTS CAN ACCESS LARGE-SCALE HOME SHOW WITHOUT TRAVELING TO BOSTON

MARCH 9, 2000--South Shore residents, long forced to trek to large convention centers in Boston to participate in home shows, now can avail themselves of the valuable services such shows provide without having to leave the South Shore. More than 150 businesses will fill 300 booths at the South Shore Home Show, the largest home show ever hosted in the region, to be held March 30 through April 2, inside a 50,000 sq. ft. temporary structure on the Marshfield Fairgrounds.

The show fills a longstanding void on the South Shore for both businesses and consumers. More than 100 South Shore businesses will participate in the show, enabling them to target their most important market in a way that a Boston-based show never could. With the booming housing market on the South Shore, consumers here finally have a local resource geared toward their housing needs.

The South Shore Home Show will be an outstanding resource for area residents looking to buy homes, renovate homes, or decorate homes. Producers of kitchens, bathrooms, furniture, appliances, outdoor necessities and other home products will be joined by builders, realtors, mortgage companies, landscapers and many other vendors.

The South Shore Home Show is managed by Atalantic Show Group of Kingston. Jill Daly and Kim Kelly, both Kingston residents, are the founding partners of Atlantic Show Group and the managers of this event. With a combined 20 years experience in coordinating trade shows, Daly and Kelly, who are sisters, launched the South Shore Home Show after recognizing the tremendous value such a show would bring to their home community. Daly and Kelly are originally from Weymouth.

Positive response from visitors and vendors who attended the South Shore Home Show in 1999, the show's inaugural year, prompted Atlantic Show Group to grow the show by 50 percent this year. Attendance is expected to reach 20,000 people. All attending can participate in a free raffle for a kitchen set valued at $10,000. A "Messiest Bedroom" contest for children, to be judged from pictures submitted by families attending the show, will bestow a $5,000 bedroom set upon the child whose bedroom is deemed the messiest.

Since no South Shore convention halls are large enough for such a show, the event will take place in a massive temporary structure built the week before the show begins. It will have heating, air conditioning, professional lighting, and all other amenities expected from a convention hall.

The show will be open 3pm-9pm on March 30, 2pm-9pm on March 31, 10am-9pm on April 1, and 10am-6pm on April 2. Admission is $7 per person, $2 for children 6-12 years old, and no charge for children under 6. For more information, call Atlantic Show Group at 781-585-0020.

There's no mistaking Marylou Sandry around the South Shore. She's the one in the pink car with the cup on top.

In the pink

Sandry eyes success with growth of Marylou's

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

The day she saw a pink coffee cup along the side of the road amidst some rubble was the day Marylou Sandry realized she had really achieved something by building up the South Shore's very own coffee chain.

Visionary

Not to say the owner of Marylou's News supports littering, because she doesn't, but it meant the world to her seeing that emblematic pink cup strewn on the side of the road with the likes of those from McDonald's and Wendy's.

Sandry has become notorious as one of the South Shore's best-known self-starter success stories. In the face of mega-chain stores like Dunkin' Donuts and Starbucks popping from thin air like fruit-flies, Marylou's News has managed to dig a solid niche in the South Shore's caffeinated landscape.

And Sandry herself is still leading the charge. The Abington resident patrols the South Shore streets unabashed in her bright pink SUV with a huge pink cup on top of it.

What began as one small coffee shop in one of the oldest sections of Hanover, is now a 14 store mini-chain.

"It really never ends, what you can do with coffee. Someone's always coming up to me and saying, 'Try this Marylou, see if you like it.'"

Marylou Sandry, owner of Marylou's News

Sitting in her pink-adorned office in Hingham, Sandry has a simple explanation: Some people want more than an arm extending from the drive-thru window when they pick up their coffee.

"People want an experience," she said.

Marylou's News, possibly more than any other business on the South Shore, has managed to make personality and customer service a huge selling point.

Of course, she'll tell you she serves absolutely the best cup of coffee in town, too.

It has been her experience that providing people with a piping hot (or ice cold) cup of "joe" along with a smile will keep customers coming back. You won't be greeted by lazy and indifferent eyes at Marylou's news.

Another selling point for Marylou's is that her shops have the unique quality of being a place where a customer can get not only a good cup of coffee, but also a newspaper and whatever other little commodity they might be needing. Sandry said the big difference between herself and other convenience stores is that in her shops the coffee tastes better.

Taste is something Sandry has always been serious about. One of Marylou's hottest selling items is her flavored coffees. All her stores offer a large menu of flavors at all times, including seasonal changes.

And Sandry takes full credit for introducing the South Shore to flavored coffee. In the early 90s before any of the other coffee shops got into it, she stole the flavored coffee market.

"I heard about it being the big rage out on the West Coast and San Francisco," she said. Soon she was ordering specialty blends from a distribution company out of Rhode Island.

South Shore residents weren't sure what to think of the variety at first.

"We had to do a lot of explaining but people loved it and it caught right on."

But once again, times have changed and Marylou said the new trend is flavored ice-coffee.

The fact iced-coffee drinks have become so popular has a huge effect on the business. And it can be tough to compete when everyone and their brother has heard of the "Coolatta." But Sandry said she still has the best the frozen market has to offer. She said every so often she sends a squad of her workers, minus their pink uniforms, to spy on what Dunkin Donuts and other coffee vendors are doing.

"It would be kind of tough for me to go on a spy mission," she said, alluding to her pink truck, and the fact that she's known to be the owner of Marylou's.

Marylou's creative team is constantly coming up with new ideas to experiment with.

"It really never ends, what you can do with coffee," she said. "Someone's always coming up to me and saying, 'Try this Marylou, see if you like it.' "

One of her more popular creations is the "Funky Fanabla," which is a mix of "secret ingredients" which inevitably make it look like a hot fudge Sundae.

Sandry said the summer is usually booming. With more business, and drinks that take longer to make, staffing needs to increase. This presents a problem for Sandry because the current economy is so good.

Lots of small businesses are having hiring troubles and where Sandry insists on hiring people who seem upbeat, it can make things ever tougher. That is why so many of her employees are younger.

Some people are just meant to work at Marylou's.

Sandry admitted her chain has found middle ground between the huge corporation and the small business. It's not as easy to run as one or two stores, so she can no longer do most of the management herself, but it is also less uptight than some of the larger corporations. And some people are drawn to that work environment.

When she started out in 1986 buying Scott's News in Hanover, she didn't really have any idea that she would one day be commanding 14 stores. At the time all she wanted was a break from her mundane job in sales. She wanted to re-invent herself, and wanted to do it quick. After a bit of research she stumbled on an ad for Scott's in the Mariner and she had to have it.

Before long she had changed the name and the place started taking off. In those days she was working all the time, and swilling so much coffee she ended up getting , as she describes it "really jiggy."

"Thankfully that store was successful and I was able to buy another one," she said.

Through the years Marylou's stores have spread through almost all of the South Shore towns, and she has some more in mind. But she only plans to expand southward toward the Cape. She has no interest in moving any farther north than Braintree.

Some of her newer stores have incorporated drive-thrus to attract the massive numbers of people who don't want to get out of their cars for coffee.

Nowadays, she's also trying to beef up business a little bit through advertisements. Her employees get a special kick out of that because they get to be in them.

"This is a big thrill for young employees," she said.

The goal of the ads is to increase her brand exposure to people outside of the South Shore.

"We're well known here in the South Shore but people passing by don't know who we are," she said. She wants to eliminate that anonymity.

When she's not working Marylou enjoys Harley riding with her husband Ronald, spending time on Cape Cod, "sneaking" off to Florida and "playing" on her boat.

She also tried to learn roller-blading but after nearly killing herself she gave up.

Her philosophy on life is simple: "You're only here for a short time, so you might as well have a good time. Make the best of it."

Companies with South Shore roots branch out in worldwide market

By Gregory Mathis
STAFF WRITER

While going global has become more commonplace in the age of computers and the Internet, several South Shore businesses have been on the worldwide scene long before modems instantly brought foreign lands to our fingertips.

From family owned businesses to international bio-tech companies, the South Shore is home to a number of companies that are major players outside local boundaries. Besides the three companies profiled in this story — E.S. Ritchie & Sons, Zildjian and Serono — other companies such at Talbot's in Hingham, ZRC Worldwide and Sabian in Marshfield and Wearguard in Norwell all have a presence in the worldwide market.

Ritchie Navigation, which has been anchored in Pembroke since 1951, has been wielding its craft of manufacturing compasses since 1850. Ritchie made itself a key player in the worldwide market the old-fashioned way — word of mouth.

"In the early '70s, Bert Sherman signed up distributors all over the world, many of whom we still use," said J. Stephen Sprole of Ritchie.

Today, Ritchie sells compasses to fishing fleets in Chile, Peru and have established accounts in Brazil, Argentina, plus every country in Western Europe, most of the countries in Eastern Europe including Hungary, Estonia, and Russia, as well as New Zealand, Australia, Singapore, Hong Kong, Japan and many other countries.

Sprole said Ritchie has a presence in practically every major worldwide market with the exception of India.

"Apparently they don't do a lot of pleasure boating in India," Sprole said.

Ritchie has evolved from a company that manufactured compasses for the U.S. Navy in the mid-1800s, to a leader in the compass industry for recreational boats, producing every size compass from tiny hand-held ones to 6-inch Globe Masters for 70-foot to 80-foot boats.

"A major portion of what we do is recreational boating, pleasure boating, and manufacturers," said Sprole. "We do not have a tremendous amount of commercial activity."

This time of year, with spring on our doorsteps, the 75 employees at the Oak Street plant are picking up the pace to meet increased demand, shipping thousands of handmade compasses a week out the door.

"This is definitely a seasonal business, with spring just huge for us," said Sprole. "We'll be busy from now through May and then late in the year for Christmas."

While most of Ritchie's business is with boat manufacturers, it does have products to serve the after-market consumers, people looking to purchase a compass for their boats after they bought them.

Sprole said the company has recently launched an Internet site, but he doesn't see Ritchie handling single sales over the Internet, especially with the volume of work the company already has.

"It would be very easy for us to do other products, but we'll stay focused on manufacturing compasses," Sprole said. "The market is large enough to support us an and we do it very well. We'll stay true to what we do."

Based up the road in Brookline, physicist Edward S. Ritchie began developing the first U.S. manufactured marine compass in 1850. He had received a contract to repair foreign-made compasses from the Boston Naval Shipyard, and he soon realized most of the problems he encountered could be eliminated. So when the U.S. Naval Observatory put out a call for American Manufactured navigational instruments in 1861 it contacted Ritchie.

According to the history of the company posted on its web site, Ritchie completed and sent samples of his work (including the first ever liquid filled compass) in June of 1861 and by August he received an order from the U.S. Navy for 26 compasses, 10 of which were liquid filled. At this time Ritchie began selling compasses under the name E.S. Ritchie & Co., which was later changed to E.S. Ritchie & Sons in 1867. In addition to the Navy, Ritchie's compasses became a standard instrument used by merchants, and by 1900 Ritchie had sold over 30,000 compasses to merchant vessels based upon the performance of his instruments and without the benefit of ever advertising. A model of Ritchie's first liquid filled compass is on display today in the Museum of Science in London, England; the only foreign product so honored.

In 1951 the company was purchased by Marine Compass Company and it was moved to Pembroke on Mattakeesett Street. Louis A. Sherman founded the Marine Compass Company in 1910 and concentrated on producing smaller instruments for commercial and fishing vessels as well as the emerging yachting markets. The two companies consolidated all operations under the name E.S. Ritchie and Sons and is still owned by the Sherman Family. The company is currently owned by Paul Sherman, grandson of Louis A. Sherman, and is operated out of its headquarters on Oak Street, where it moved to in 1978.

In 1991 Ritchie significantly raised the level of electronic navigation with the introduction of the Magtronic Electronic Compass and Heading System. In the short time since its introduction Ritchie has been striving to make the high-tech electronics available to the pleasure boat owner by offering smaller, more affordable models that use the same technology.

Workers put the finishing touches on compasses at Ritchie Navigation in Pembroke. The company is one of many based on the South Shore and serving a worldwide audience.

Family secret passed on

Stacked in the back of Zildjian's Norwell-based plant are cymbals — packaged and ready to be shipped out to Thailand, France, Germany, Italy, and the Philippines.

While the majority of Zildjian's business still comes from the United States, Zildjian sells its cymbals to more than 150 different countries.

"Japan is our biggest market outside the United States," said Colin Schofield, vice president of marketing worldwide for Zildjian.

Schofield said the Asian/Pacific Rim and German markets began to slow down due to the economies in those regions, but Schofield said the worldwide market is making a comeback.

"The international market is a real focus for us right now," Schofield said, who got his start with Zildjian in its London office 15 years ago.

According to Schofield, Zildjian has a 70 percent share in the United States and 60 percent outside the U.S.

He said competition from U.S.-based companies, including Sabian, and foreign companies has helped the cymbal industry evolve.

"There are a lot of other cymbal makers in the world, but it helps us to strive harder to be more innovative," Schofield said.

The Zildjian Company celebrated its 375th anniversary in 1998. Today, the company is still run by the Zildjian family. Craigie Zildjian, the daughter of Armand Zildjian, has been given the task of taking the business into the next millennium. Craigie is the 14th generation Zildjian to run the company.

"That's the key reason for our success," said Schofield. "Their interests are not based on short term gain, their intentions are to nurture and enrich the business.

"A tremendous amount of the family's resources are put back into the business and everybody can feel that in the building," said Schofield.

The nurturing aspect of the business was what helped Avedis III cultivate the top drummers of the swing era of the 1920s, which Zildjian took advantage of by opening an American headquarters in Quincy.

"Avedis spent a lot of nights in New York, at all the jazz centers," said Schofield. "He went out and sought them out and the personal relationships developed from that."

As American music evolved, so did Zildjian's cymbals.

Then the music industry changed for good in 1964, bringing Zildjian and others in the music business to a new level.

"When the Beatles went on the Ed Sullivan show, the business changed overnight," said Schofield. "All of a sudden we had 90,000 cymbals on back order and that's when we became a multi-million dollar business."

Today the company makes 650 cymbals ranging from 6" to 24" and 21/2 pounds to 16 pounds.

The company also makes drum sticks out of a site in Alabama.

According to Schofield, Sabian formed following the death of Avedis III. Armand was named his successor over younger brother, Robert. Differences between the two couldn't be worked out, so Robert left to form Sabian in 1982, which has its headquarters Meductic, New Brunswick, Canada. According to Sabian's website, there are two offices in the United States, located in Marshfield, Massachusetts and Los Angeles, California. The main international office is situated in Monte Carlo, Monaco, and there are Sabian distributors supplying approximately 120 countries.

All's well with Serono

A multi-million dollar Swiss biotechnology company that began pioneering infertility drugs in the early 1900s is on the cutting edge when it comes to advancements in AIDS research and developing drugs to treat growth disorders in children.

And Serono Laboratories will soon make Rockland its U.S. headquarters as it heads into the new millennium. Serono is currently spread out over three locations on the South Shore, including two offices in Norwell and one in Randolph. Barbara Yates, director of public relations for Serono, said the 200,000 square foot building scheduled to be built within the next year on the Rockland/Hingham line will house all aspects of the operation.

"It will be a fully integrated biotech firm, everything from basic research to producing and marketing commercial drugs," said Yates. "It's unique because many companies just focus on the research and development side."

The U.S.-based Serono is responsible for one-third of the activity of the parent company, Ares-Serono S.A., which is headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland. With 1999 sales topping the $1 billion mark for the first time, Ares-Serono operated in 45 countries and sells drugs in more than 100 countries worldwide.

Yates said the United States was a natural for Ares-Sorono to build a headquarters since the U.S. is the number one drug market in the world. She also said it was a natural because of the sophisticated health care system.

"The U.S. is a strong base for science and technology, no doubt about it," said Yates. "There are a substantial number of researchers here."

Serono has been operating on the South Shore since 1971 and is clearly entrenched in the area.

"The company has a long-standing commitment to the South Shore," Yates said. "We got very comfortable here and involved in the community. There was no doubt in our minds that the South Shore was our choice for our U.S. headquarters and we were fortunate to find this piece of property.

"Part of the reason Serono has been attracted to the South Shore is because our employees enjoy being in a community and they don't have to fight the traffic on the Southeast Expressway.

Serono, through developer A.W. Perry, has secured the necessary permits from town boards in Rockland and Hingham to begin construction on the 200,000 square foot building that straddles the two towns on Commerce Road, off Hingham Street.

Yates said initial construction will begin this spring with a formal groundbreaking scheduled for late summer, early fall. The headquarters should be operational by the first half of 2001, according to Yates.

When it's completed, Yates said Serono will employ more than 500 employees.

"It's an exciting time for us," Yates said.

Adding to the excitement is the advancements the company is making with some of its products currently being developed.

Yates said there are two major clinical trials currently taking place in the U.S. dealing with treatments for multiple sclerosis and an HIV related condition, lipodystrohy. Lipodystrophy causes abnormalities in body shape, such as a buffalo hump-like condition in the back and extended bellies.

"We are the first company to do a trial (for lipodystrophy)," Yates said. "An area we have really pioneered is HIV."

Serono also produces a drug called Serostim, a product that's given to HIV patients to help fight the virus and battle secondary conditions that arise, including metabolic disorders and body abnormalities.

One drug Serono has on the market treats AIDS wasting, in which HIV patients lose lean body mass and muscle and retain fat. Once the lean body muscle is depleted, the disease then attacks the fat before resulting in death.

Other areas Serono specializes in is infertility drugs. Yates said Ares-Sorono was manufacturing infertility drugs before the term "biotechnology" was coined.

Pergonal is a common infertility drug that has been on the market for many years and a newer Serono product is called Gonal-F.

Serono also has a drug called Saizen, which is a growth hormone deficiency treatment for children. Yates said it is mostly used for small children who are not properly generating growth hormones. She said the drug is simple to use and helps these children with normal and healthy growth. A new needle-free drug is also being tested which will be less painful for the child and cause less anxiety for the child and parent who may be scared by needles.

Real Estate 2000

The company that Jack built

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

If you happen to take a stroll through the Jack Conway headquarters in Norwell with the owner himself, you'll undoubtedly be surprised by the chipper series of "Hey Jack"s and "How's it goin Jack"s you'll hear as he walks past his smiling employees.

Visionary

Within seconds of meeting Conway you begin to realize how he has managed to build the largest privately owned real estate business in Massachusetts and perhaps even New England: He's a charmer.

"I've always liked the communication part of the business the best," said the 76-year-old Conway, sitting in his crimson-leather chair in his cluttered office, with papers and letters forming a semi-circle around him.

"I'm having the time of my life running this business," he said. "My job is a joy."

Conway said in today's marriage-happy real estate environment, he's content on playing the bachelor. He has absolutely no plans on selling or merging, ever.

It's his feeling that after building a business from scratch and working to make it successful for more than 40 years, there's no way he's going to sell it to a larger company, which could immediately make it faceless and nameless. Not to mention the possibility of it clearing out his current staff, whom he loves.

He's had three offers to buy recently from NRT, Cendant (owners of Codwell Banker, Century 21) and GMAC. The latter, despite the fact that they offered him huge money, really tickled Conway's sense of humor.

"Why fold up now?" he said, joking. "I'd probably end up parking cars for somebody."

Conway's plans for the future don't involve selling anything except for homes. He's currently expanding in yet untapped areas of the state, like Dartmouth, Wareham, and Lakeville, where he plans to build a regional headquarters. And he doesn't intend to change his image a bit.

"We're still the neighborhood Realtor," he said.

The idea of being the neighborhood Realtor is one Conway she he believes is firm, and very simple. He posed the logical question: Why would anyone want to buy a home in Massachusetts from some guy who lives in New Jersey?

Naturally, the decision to remain privately owned has posed some interesting challenges for Conway's team in the way of remaining competitive, but he insists the close connection with local communities — as well as a strong inter-office community — will allow for continued success.

Currently, the Mass. Association of Realtors is reporting a 2.1 percent dip in sales for 1999, whereas Conway said he experienced a 30 percent increase for last year.

As he sees it, the increase is because of both grassroots service and expansion.

"You have to keep it as close as you can to the old Ivory soap standard, 99.9 percent pure," said Conway.

And while his business has grown exponentially, he said the style hasn't changed much.

"I'm having the time of my life running this business. My job is a joy."
–Jack Conway

"Typically our business is taking a single-family house and selling it," he said.

But there are occasions when the company plays a more active role in development, often pitching land to a developer so that he can subdivide it, and then having it thrown back to them. Conway admitted, it's something of a real estate flea-flicker. That's the "fun" stuff, Conway said.

And although things have become highly mechanized today, Conway said the fundamentals are the same: know your territory and your community and remain professional.

Today's real estate environment is friendly, depending on your vantage point, Conway said.

People searching for "bread and butter" homes are having a lot more trouble because they are in heavy demand with a relatively slim supply. Exacerbating that problem is the fact that many of the new developments consist of huge homes, affectionately labeled "start up castles" and "McMansions" by some, which certainly don't fall into the "affordable," $150,000-$250,000 category.

As always, cars and homes are still huge status symbols. Developers know this, and if there is a market out there for enormous homes, ranging anywhere from $400,000 to $1 million, they are going to continue to build them.

Conway said the inverse will occur during a recession. Prices drop, so you can get more for your buck, but your home is likely declining in value as well. Selling your home for a reasonable price and in turn getting a better deal on a home of higher value during a recession is comparable to jumping from car to car on a moving train.

"If you're James Bond you could do it," Conway said.

But for now, the market is good. Conway just wishes there were more affordable houses, which would sell like hot cakes.

Conway began his career as a real estate man back in 1957 out of an office owned by a Realtor in Natick. Prior to that he had been a reporter covering the boxing beat for the Record-American, of which his father had been the editor. The Record-American eventually evolved into the Herald of today.

He was tired of the pay constraints the union had on his salary, and he wanted to be a "free spirit." One day, on a long drive back from covering a boxing match, he decided to never cover another fight, and quit shortly thereafter.

He never told his wife, because he figured it would be pretty easy to get a new job. Not so.

"No one wanted to hire an ex-boxing writer," Conway recalled.

He began scrounging for jobs in banking and was shocked to realize his salary was going to be halved. It made for an easy decision.

That was when he got hooked up with Martin Cerel in Natick. Someone had told Cerel that Conway would make a good salesman, and Cerel took him in.

Conway remembers his very first day, reclining in his new chair in his new office and being suddenly interrupted by an interested customer. His boss wasn't around.

"I'm interested in that house out on Route 80 in Wayland," the customer said. Conway had no idea where it was, or how much it was selling for, and his boss was nowhere to be found.

"Alright," he replied, and his career officially began.

He avoided the location problem by asking the customer if he might drive. He thought on his feet and said his car was having problems. The customer didn't mind driving.

In order to figure out the price, Conway ran next door and asked the neighbors how much the house was selling for. The neighbors told him it was selling for about $19,000. Now all he had to do was break-in.

While the customer waited at the front door, Conway ran around back, broke a window on the back door with his elbow, walked casually to the front door and let the customer in.

Conway went on to sell that home, and ended up becoming lifelong friends with the customer.

"I got such a thrill out of it," he said, reminiscing about his first sale.

From there he continued to get experience over the next year, and eventually decided to start his own business. He asked his boss where he didn't plan to expand to next, because he didn't want to compete with the man who'd trained him, and his boss said the South Shore.

He said the South Shore had absolutely nothing to offer in terms of real estate sales.

Conway packed his things and moved to Hingham to set up camp. The fact that Bethlehem Steel went on strike the week he opened wasn't very encouraging, he said. But, determined that things would work out he put a small ad in the daily newspaper and eventually his small one office/two worker operation began expanding.

From the office in Hingham center Conway moved south into Cohasset and Scituate, and continued to move south into Marshfield, Duxbury, and Plymouth. Later on he branched into Hanover, Hanson, Whitman and Pembroke.

Conway said all of his offices are thriving, which is believable when you take into consideration the fact that about a month ago he took 68 of his best producers on an all-expense paid trip to Costa Rico.

These days, Conway spends much of his free-time traveling to exotic places, boating and writing. He likes nothing more than boating through rivers and tributaries he has never seen, and charting the course and the experiences. He has published a few of his own short books so far, and plans to do more.

In his last book, he documented his trip down the St. John's River in Florida.

Thriving economy opens door for booming real estate market

By Paula Woodhull
STAFF WRITER

The good times just keep rolling for real estate on the South Shore.

That's the good news according to those who have experienced the ups and downs of the south of Boston real estate market, an area that regional planners have labeled "a new growth frontier."

Prices have risen steadily during the last three years, mostly due to a limited supply, strong demand and a good economy.

"In every corner of the state, the healthy economy has people feeling confident and financially secure, and they're taking advantage of this present period of prosperity to buy homes," said Fred Meyer, president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

Is the bubble likely to burst anytime soon? Not in a big way, although the chief economist for the National Association of Realtors recently issued a report that warns of storm clouds appearing on the horizon, but not until late 2001 or early 2002.

That's when the economy could become so over-heated that the Federal Reserve steps in and raises interests rates significantly to curb the threat of inflation. Such a move would have a slight cooling effect on real estate here and around the country, but would stave off the threat of a more serious recession.

Any such concerns are a long way off, though, according to local realtors.

"The South Shore is in good shape. Residential real estate is going to be strong for some time to come," said Donna Chase, a vice-president of Hunneman-Coldwell Banker and a realtor in the company's Norwell office.

With the economy strong, sales are brisk, most notably at the higher end of the market where baby-boomers are purchasing larger homes, seaside vacation retreats and condos with money earned from stock and mutual funds invested in the high-flying stock market, according to the MAR.

That trend holds especially true in communities all along the South Shore, an area which attracts people who work in Boston's lucrative financial and high technology sectors but who want to settle in the south suburbs.

Real estate prices in coastal towns such as Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Marshfield are driven upward by home buyers in search of difficult-to-find, expensive waterfront property.

This colonial on Side Hill Road is the least expensive new construction in Hingham. It is on the market for $399,900.

That upward pressure on prices, combined with the scarcity of land, reverberates through neighboring communities, from Weymouth and Braintree all the way down to Plymouth.

"The South Shore is very much in demand right now," said Loretta Harrington of Jack Conway & Co.'s Scituate office. "All the towns along the coast are booming right now."

Harrington said newcomers are lured by the quaint charm of the South Shore, the beaches, as well as the easy access to Boston for work and Cape Cod for play.

"You spend a little bit more but you're buying a richer lifestyle," said Harrington. "You can't beat it. It's not cheap, but it's not overpriced, either."

The town of Hull, just north of posh Cohasset, has been an undiscovered bargain for years, but that, too, is changing.

"Hull is picking up in price," said Harrington. A year ago, modest houses in that coastal community could be found for $100,000 and more, but now the least expensive listing is around $165,000.

The cheapest new construction in Hingham, a new colonial, is on the market for $399,900.

Buyers who can't afford the more expensive coastal towns are looking inland to Hanson, Rockland, Abington, Hanover and Pembroke, and further south to Kingston and Plymouth, an area that has become more attractive to commuters with the reopening of the Old Colony commuter rail into Boston in 1997.

Real estate prices in these towns are on the rise, too, as demand for more moderately priced homes exceeds supply.

In rural Hanson, the sales price for a new colonial has jumped from $289,000 to $339,000 in the past year alone. The reopening of the commuter train has sparked a building boom there.

"Hanover is getting pretty pricey," Chase said. New construction there is in the $400,000 to $500,000 range.

Quiet, picturesque Norwell is desirable as well, where Chase said people are buying "absolutely charming" homes and replacing them with new construction.

Upscale towns such as Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset are seeing a trend toward "mega-houses" — very large homes with all the amenities selling for $500,000 and much more.

"So many people are doing well in this economy, those houses are selling," Chase said.

The next up and coming area, Chase said, will be Plymouth because there is still land available there for development, unlike most other communities on the South Shore where new construction suffers due to a shortage of land, driving the costs ever higher.

"We can still offer a new home for under $300,000 in Plymouth," said Chase. "That's the American dream."

Businesses struggle to fill jobs in tight labor market

Skating Arena off Route 3 near the Hingham-Weymouth line, says the business depends on high school and college students and "moonlighting" adults.

"We're desperate," she said. "In 27 years, this is the worst we've seen. "Kids used to be lined up begging us to clean barrels and sweep. It has put a lot tension on the full-time staff."

Taylor, who said the rink employs a combination of about 30 part-time and full-time people and pays anywhere from minimum wage to $8 and up depending on the job, thinks the good economy has translated into kids that don't need to work.

"Kids going to school are the life bread of this business," she said. "Every teenager who bought a car needed a job so badly and nowadays, they just have cars."

Taco Bell on Route 53 in Norwell cut its hours back late last year, closing at 9 p.m., because it couldn't fill the job spots.

Manager Steve Ndemba said the restaurant is fully staffed now and open until midnight although he's worried about attracting enough workers for the busy summer season.

"We're hiring at a higher rate — $8-$8.50 an hour," Ndemba said.

Dan Nessralla of Penniman Hill Farm off Route 53 in Hingham said the tight labor market means paying more an hour whether the job is at Home Depot in Rockland or at his family's 40-year-old business.

"There are so many jobs out there," he said. "And in ours, you have to get a little bit dirty and that's not as attractive."

Winer of the DET said the tight labor market is not a cause for panic.

"The market place does balance out," he said. However, the outlook for the economy remains rosy and that's something to be grateful for, Winer said.

"Most businesses prefer this scene," he said. "Rather than one in which business is bad and everyone is knocking at your door to get a job and you have no jobs to give them."

Three's a crowd

Selectman candidates gear up for Saturday

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

One candidate is a passionate advocate for a downtown commuter rail station. Another is a fervent supporter of the $41.8 million school renovation project. Another feels the town's expenditures should be investigated much more thoroughly.

Voters will have a chance to endorse or reject these views at Saturday's annual town election, when one of the candidates is elected Cohasset's next selectman.

The three candidates vying for the seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan are planning board member Robert Sturdy, former selectman Michael Sullivan, and former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins.

All three agreed that Saturday's override vote on the school renovation project will have a tremendous impact upon the future of the town. They were split, however, on whether the project's impact would be beneficial if it were approved.

"I hope the override doesn't pass," said Sturdy, a former member of the Brookline school committee. "The school facilities committee took what amounted to a ridiculous wish list and ran with it. The academics in our schools need to be better. We should concentrate on that, not bricks and mortar."

Jenkins has also voiced his opposition to the renovation project at town meeting and during his campaign for selectman. He acknowledged the need for renovations at the middle high school and Deer Hill, but said he thought the $41.8 million project approved at town meeting is too costly.

"If they [the school facilities committee] had come out with a project in the $22 million to $28 million range, I would support it," Jenkins said.

Jenkins proposed an article at the March 25 town meeting to phase in repairs at the schools rather than seeking to implement the renovation project at once. His article asking for an $800,000 capital-exclusion override to begin the repairs was defeated at town meeting.

"Of course we're going to have to raise taxes. I have no problem raising taxes. But when we do it, we need a damn good reason."
— Selectman candidate Leland Jenkins

"I only put my proposal forward as an alternative," Jenkins said. "I wanted to make sure something was done in case the town meeting vote or the override vote on the renovation project failed."

The only candidate to support the renovation project, Sullivan said the dilapidated state of the schools mandates the need for extensive repairs.

"I don't know how you can say you support education without renovating the schools," Sullivan said. "I think they [Sturdy and Jenkins]

Cohasset Golf Club abutters concerned about expansion

Want a special permit required for accessory uses

"Our problem is that they'll be able to expand their building and expand their parking lot without anyone checking up on them."
— Laurel Martinez, 136 Lamberts Lane

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Does the Cohasset Golf Club receive special treatment under the town's zoning bylaws?

That was the question asked by Lamberts Lane abutters at Tuesday night's zoning board of appeals meeting. The residents were at the meeting to explain their appeal of Building Commissioner Bob Egan's ruling that functions in the club's dining room and lounge do not require a special permit.

Zoning bylaws allow golf courses as a matter of right in a residential district, and Egan said he believes dining room and lounge activities are customary accessory uses typical of private golf courses.

Laurel Martinez, 136 Lamberts Lane, said such uses may be customary of private golf courses, but usually face some type of regulations.

"While these functions may be typical of a private golf course, we haven't found one in the area that doesn't have to get a special permit first," Martinez said. "We want this board to have some authority to regulate activities at the golf club. At what point do the accessory uses take it over? Our position is there should be some kind of special permit required to regulate those uses."

By zoning bylaw, the number of golf memberships at the club is limited to 320. Martinez said social memberships and use of the golf memberships by family members have significantly increased the number of people driving up and down Lamberts Lane to get to the golf club.

Red Lion gas leak threatens village

Homes and business evacuated as precaution

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A gas leak last Thursday morning at the Red Lion Inn caused nearby businesses and residences to be evacuated, but police chief Brian Noonan said the temporary inconvenience paled in comparison to the explosion which could have resulted.

"The potential was there for extreme disaster," Noonan said. "They were doing some excavation work there and inadvertently ripped the pipe. The Red Lion is a huge building, and it filled up with gas. Most of the windows were closed. There could have been a nasty scene had anything electrical sparked."

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said a construction worker called the department's dispatcher at 7:55 a.m. to report the ruptured gas pipe near the rear of the Red Lion Inn. Lincoln was unsure if Dig Safe had been called to mark the location of the gas line prior to excavation work.

Noonan said workers at the Red Lion Inn rushed to escape the gas-filled building.

"I was driving through the town parking lot on my way to work and I saw people running out of the building like rats," Noonan said.

"The potential was there for extreme disaster."
— Police chief Brian Noonan

Two fire engines, an aerial ladder truck, and the department's ambulance were immediately sent to the scene, while firefighters from Scituate covered the Cohasset station. Lincoln said everyone near the Red Lion was evacuated in case of an explosion.

"We shut off the electrical power to the building and immediately evacuated the area," he said. "We didn't know what potential existed for ignition. It was a high-pressure line that broke and there was quite a bit of gas. The four levels of the building were filled with it. With that much gas, even a cigarette could potentially have set the thing off."

Firefighters opened windows inside the building to allow the gas to vent outdoors, reducing the chances of explosion.

Those in the area noticed the gas fumes immediately.

"We couldn't smell it inside the bakery, but I smelled it as soon as I walked out the door," said Patrick Ford, an employee of French Memories bakery on South Main Street. "All the businesses were out here and we were all moved about 500 feet away."

Lincoln said those on South Main Street from St. Stephen's church to Summer Street had been evacuated by 8:30 a.m., when the gas company arrived on the scene to clamp off the damaged pipe and stop the flow of gas. Homes and businesses on

Open Space survey

A survey from the Open Space Committee has been included in this quarter's tax bills.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee, urges you to take the time to fill out the questionnaire because the results will help the Open Space Committee define open space and recreation priorities during the next five years.

"Every five years the state mandates that towns file an open space and recreation plan. Our plan expires in June 2001, and the Open Space Committee is in the process of updating it. If we don't have an active plan, we won't be eligible for many state grant and loan programs," she said.

Forms are available in the town hall and library, and surveys may be left in the drop boxes at both locations.

The Open Space Committee is also looking for one new member. Anyone interested should call Cook at 383-6313.

Sewer fund grant

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said that Cohasset will receive $14,925 from the state's sewer rate relief fund for fiscal year 2000. This funding will go toward on going projects relating to Cohasset's Sewer Treatment Facility for water pollution control projects.

As a member of the Senate Ways & Means Committee Senator Hedlund has worked to increase funding for this program. Funding for the program has increased 12.8 percent in the past year. In addition to advocating for continued funding for the Commonwealth Sewer Rate Relief Program, Senator Hedlund has been instrumental in strengthening the states Sewer State Revolving Fund which provides assistance through loan subsides for sewer projects in non MWRA communities.

"Providing basic infrastructure such as wastewater treatment to residents is a primary function of government and these are two great programs that help us to accomplish that goal" said Hedlund.

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

Working hard to protect Cohasset's future

Train mitigation chairman wants best deal for the town

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

He may not be the hardest working man in show business, but Tom Gruber can certainly contend for the title in Cohasset.

Marketing manager for the Boston Form printing company in Norwell, Gruber also does some independent consulting work on the side. But those are just his professional obligations.

A member of the Cohasset Rotary, Gruber served as chairman of Sunday's Road Race By-The-Sea and is also a member of the town's historical society. He served as editor of 'Leap for Life,' the book published by the society about the Hanlon Brothers, world-famous acrobats who had a studio in Cohasset.

Gruber most important volunteer activity to the residents of Cohasset, however, may be as chairman of the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee, meeting with MBTA officials in an attempt to protect the interests of the town should the Greenbush commuter line be built.

"We're trying to protect the citizens of Cohasset wherever we can," said the tall, bespectacled Gruber. "Wherever we can find an opportunity to have the system designed better, we're going to explore that opportunity."

The best chance to secure mitigation for the town is likely to be Section 106, which involves the protection of historic properties. The MBTA must provide a higher level of mitigation for any buildings or districts deemed to have historic value.

Gruber has been working to understand the parameters of Section 106 and how it can benefit Cohasset. Upon his recommendation, the town has hired consultant Wendy Frontiero of Beverly to assist the mitigation committee in pinpointing town properties along the rail line which could receive increased mitigation as historic structures.

"Once I understood Section 106, I realized it had to be done," Gruber said. "Once the T gets that permit, it's full speed ahead, pedal to the metal. We're at the point of maximum impact right now, where we can get the most for the town."

Gruber has been chairman of the mitigation committee for nearly three years, meeting often with the MBTA and its consultants. He was asked to join the committee by selectmen and fellow mitigation committee member Diane Sullivan, who said Gruber has worked tirelessly to serve the town as mitigation chairman.

"He's absolutely the best," Sullivan said. "He has got to be the most thorough, committed person when he takes on a project. He's in constant contact with the T, with [MBTA Greenbush project coordinator] Kevin Dasey, and with Hingham. He is working extremely hard on Section 106 and goes to all the meetings. I can't believe all of the time he gives up to serve this town."

"I can't believe all of the time he gives up to serve this town."
— Selectman Diane Sullivan

When asked if he knew what he was getting into when he agreed to serve as mitigation chairman, Gruber laughed, saying "absolutely not." Between all of his obligations, he said his spare time is pretty limited.

"As my wife will tell you, there's not a lot of time left over," Gruber said.

Gruber said he took on the job because his academic background and lack of a strong stance on whether a commuter rail should come through town made him well-suited to the task.

"A lot of people are very polarized with respect to the train," he said. "From a selectman's standpoint, that's not the best approach to mitigation. You want someone who doesn't have a strong agenda, except to get the best deal for the town. I have a master's degree in engineering, so I understand a lot of the technical stuff they're doing. I can sit at the section 106 meetings and know what's going on. I enjoy that part of it, it's fun."

Gruber's commitment to protecting the town's historic properties is unique for someone who has only lived in town since 1991, a relative newcomer compared to many of those in town who were born and raised in Cohasset.

A native of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland, Gruber and his wife Kathie moved to Connecticut for three years before settling in Cohasset. He has two children, Leo, 30, an engineer in Ohio, and Elizabeth, 29, who works in field marketing for Gallo Wine in Atlanta.

His first involvement in town politics came as a result of the debate about the Town Manager Act back in 1996. Though selectmen at the time voted 4-1 against the change in town government, Gruber thought the switch was vital to the future of the town.

"It seemed like a once-in-a-lifetime chance to change the structure of the town government," he said. "I thought it was the time to get involved. The selectmen as a group were trying to take care of all the details, and that's not good for the day-to-day operations of the town."

The Town Manager Act prevailed at town meeting and Gruber has been involved in issues affecting the town ever since.

Sullivan said she hopes Gruber stays involved in the future.

"He's amazing," she said. "He proves the old saying that if you're looking for the best person for a project, the busiest one you can find is usually your best bet. Frankly, I had hoped he would succeed me on the Board of Selectmen. I think he'd make a fine selectman."

With all that is on his plate concerning mitigation, Gruber declined Sullivan's request to run for selectman this year. He said he would welcome help on mitigation issues from those similarly devoted to protecting the town.

"We need someone who can really get involved, who has an interest in learning what it's all about without having an agenda," Gruber said.

Anyone wishing to help with mitigation issues should contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Cohasset and the late John Henderson Linsley, will be an internal medical resident at Brown University Medical School for the next three years. Letitia is a graduate of Cohasset schools, Johns Hopkins University and receives her M.D. from the University of Vermont Medical School this May.

Her proud mother, sisters and brother congratulate her! And so do we. Well done and the best of luck for a very bright future, Letitia!

GARDEN CLUB HONORS

Maura Ditmar of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset recently received the South Shore District Award of Merit at the annual meeting held at the Barker Tavern in Scituate. Maura has been a real leader in the club's growth and spirit over the past many years. Her enthusiasm, knowledge and warmth has nurtured the club and brought it many proud moments. As a board member for eight years, Maura has served as a director, second vice president, chairman of the Christmas House Tour, was in charge of ways and means and helped run very successful plant sales. She is indeed a treasured asset to the club.

In addition to Maura's award, the Community Garden Club was awarded a third-place ribbon for its still-life entry at the New England Flower Show. The entry "Carousel" depicted the movie of the same title. The club sends special thanks to Carousel Antiques for the loan of the horse.

At the South Shore District Annual Meeting, from left are Community Garden Club members Maura Ditmar, Pam Pelletier (president); Marsha Hoav and Linda Ladd of the Museum of Fine arts. FRENCH COOKING

Word has it that Chloe Koines of Cohasset joined about 30 other children for a French Cooking and Etiquette Class offered by LeMeridien Boston and the French Library and Cultural Center.

Chloe and the others helped prepare their own lunch with help from LeMeridien chefs and were taught etiquette and French lessons. On the menu was: gratinée à cultivateur, quiche with petit salade, and tarte aux framboises.

Chloe, you can fix lunch for the Mariner staff anytime!

ON STAGE

Cohasset's very own Leigh-Anne Walsh, a sophomore, and Aimee Sears, a senior, were on stage recently in the musical drama "Cabaret" at Thayer Academy. We heard that all three performances were sold out! More than 70 students appeared in the production, making it one of the largest shows ever staged at Thayer.

Learn about farming at Holly Hill on April 8

Open house is Saturday

Holly Hill Farm on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset will hold an Open House Saturday, April 8, from 10 to 11 a.m. for persons interested in learning more about the farm's upcoming summer program.

At the Open House participants and their parents will tour the farm, meet the program's staff and have a chance to ask questions about the program. Application forms will be available at the farm.

The summer program will provide Cohasset boys and girls, 12 years of age and older, opportunities to learn about growing and selling vegetables and flowers, following the principles of organic farming, under the direction of the farm' s manager, Martin Gursky.

Two three-week sessions will be offered this summer, the first starting Tuesday, July 11, and the second Tuesday, August 1. The program will operate Tuesday through Friday of each week from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Summer participants will learn by working alongside farm manager Gursky, an organic grower of 25 years who has been involved in similar programs in other communities where the emphasis has been as much on providing a fun learning experience for teenagers as on farming. Under Gursky's direction participants will work in the fields, harvest and prepare crops for sale and manage the on-site farm stand.

For Holly Hill Farm, for many years known as White's Farm, the summer program is part of a new community venture which began last fall with the farm helping Cohasset Middle School teachers Lourdeen Casoni and Robert Erlandsen develop garden plots for their seventh-grade classes on the lawn behind the school. Spring planting is already underway. This summer the farm will also offer in collaboration with the Cohasset School System's Summer Institute an introductory organic farming course.

Persons interested in further information should call Martin Gursky at (781) 383-6965.

A vote for the schools

We'd like to add our voice to those who support the $41 million school expansion/renovation projects debt exclusion on Saturday's election ballot.

The state is expected to reimburse the town about 60 percent of the cost of the project. That means Cohasset taxpayers will foot the bill for about $16 million.

No one disputes that the Deer Hill and middle-high schools are in dire need of complete overhauls. Frankly, the condition of the school buildings is an embarrassment to a town that prides itself on education.

What is at issue is how to go about fixing the schools. That's the choice before you on Saturday. A yes vote means the town will have two, like-new schools with useful lives of at least 50 years. A no vote, means it's back to the drawing board for the school facilities committee.

But even with 60 cents reimbursement on the dollar — a good deal in our book — the override will have an impact on your property estate tax bills.

Therefore, we call on selectmen to follow Hingham's lead and form a task force on affordability. Hingham passed a $40 million override to expand and renovate its high school and South Elementary School a few years back. But the process was a very divisive one with many Hingham families and seniors worried about being priced out of town.

In addition to looking at ways to attract affordable housing, expand a commercial tax base and establish tax work-off programs, Hingham's financial officers borrowed aggressively for the school project and were able to make some money for the town in the process. In a nutshell, they were able to borrow at about 3-1/2 percent and invest at 5 percent — making close to $1 million, which will be used to offset the years when the project has the highest impact on Hingham taxpayers.

We wholeheartedly agree that it's time for Cohasset to have schools it can be proud of. Bricks and mortar don't make the student. Cohasset schools turn out a terrific product thanks to top teachers and well-educated, caring parents. But the condition school buildings does have an effect on something that is not as measurable as an MCAS or SAT score — that is student and community pride. We want to be able to show off more than our student accomplishments and be able to point to our school buildings without being ashamed when guests come to town whether those are sports or re-accreditation teams.

At the same time, the town must work to keep itself from becoming completely unaffordable for middle-income folks. It's a challenging task but not an impossible one.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Inaccuracies in letter addressed

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the School Facilities Committee, I am responding to a March 30 letter to the editor, which contains inaccurate information in seven points. I take these items in the order in which they were stated.

The School Facilities Committee has spent many hours examining the issue of building new buildings versus renovating the current buildings. We decided against building new facilities for the following reasons: a.)The actual "construction" costs to build similar facilities at both the Deer Hill and Middle/High School would be $2 million more than renovation; when demolition and other project costs are included, the cost increases $2 to $3 million more. b.) Both sites are very restricted and would not allow for both demolition and reconstruction to occur while education of the students continues. c.) There are no available sites in Cohasset that could accommodate new school buildings; even if there were, the cost to acquire such land is not reimbursable. d.) It is not a prudent use of Town money to demolish both buildings completely, as there are good spaces worth salvaging in both schools.

State reimbursement is available to the Town of Cohasset under the current School Building Assistance Program only if the project addresses all facility deficiencies and all educational program needs and adequately plans for future enrollment growth. The $41 million proposal is the only proposal that meets these requirements.

The size of classrooms at both schools meets the current State guideline for reimbursement. Classrooms — and the rest of the schools — will be completely renovated to include all new lighting, heating, plumbing, electrical, storage and technology needs.

The total educational plan is addressed by renovation in both buildings, providing adequate space for science, language arts, music, art, library and cafeteria uses, as well as new classrooms to meet the enrollment needs for the foreseeable future. The gym planned for the Middle/Senior High School is equal to the size of the two present gyms. We have approved increasing the size of the present Deer Hill gym so it is appropriate for community use.

The design of the Deer Hill gym is not yet established. Preliminary plans have shown a "vaulted" roof, which softens the look of the building. The Committee intends to ensure that the final design is attractive and fits well in the context of the site.

Enrollment projections for the next ten years show enrollment growth of over 11 percent system wide, 17 percent growth in grades 6-8 and 35 percent growth in grades 9-12. Adding staff, which would be needed to properly educate our children whether or not we renovate, will be considered when the School Committee believes it necessary.

An increase in operational costs will be a function of running an efficient and well-maintained building. Our committee is working diligently with Mark Haddad, Town Manager, to best address the funding of these operational increases.

The School Facilities Committee has spent the last 18 months deliberating over these well-thought-out plans that we believe best address the needs of Cohasset in the least expensive manner for all citizens. The project is supported by the Town Manager, majority of Selectmen (4-1), majority of Advisory Committee members (6-1) all Capital Budget and School Committee members. Overwhelming approval at Town Meeting shows the support of Cohasset citizens for this plan to meet the educational needs of our students.

Road race support

THE BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

The Cohasset Rotary Club wishes to extend its thanks to the Town of Cohasset for its excellent support of Sunday's 24th annual Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea. In particular we'd like to single out the support of Harold Litchfield and the DPW crew whose behind the scenes work make the race course safe and clean after the throes of winter and the construction nightmare that Cohasset has become. The police department were very supportive, and in particular the help of the Animal Control Officer.

The weather this year was terrific and over 950 registered runners made the race very festive and exciting. The runners very much enjoyed our town and its beautiful scenery. The turnout for the walk was great, as well.

Of special interest were the 75 volunteers from our community who turned out to assist our very small Rotary Club to make this event the successful. These volunteers included the Appalachian Service Project and the Youth Resources as well as other local individual volunteers who gave up several hours of their time. Without this outpouring of Town support we could not have offered the runners the quality of run they enjoyed.

Thomas L. Gruber
Cohasset Rotary Club Race Chairman
Editors' note: Mr. Gruber provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter for publication.

Back the train

TO THE EDITOR:

Selectman and Planning Board members elected Saturday will probably have important impact on Greenbush issues. To me it doesn't matter where the station goes but I want to urge, plead, implore Cohasset candidates and voters who have expressed doubts not to impede restoration. Please consider these four important reasons:

1. Experience: When we moved here in 1958 the trains were happily used without objection even from abutters. If there was noise, we were used to it, or didn't notice, or welcomed that bit of Americana. (Anyone who has traveled in Europe knows that today's trains glide in and out of picturesque villages without disturbance). The "baby boom" children, including our four, walked and rode bikes across the tracks all the time. Nobody ever got hurt. There were safety gates, bells, flashing lights, and school crossing guards. If a train passed through, children waved and trainmen waved back. Trains were normal parts of life.

2. History: Preceded by stagecoaches, trains ran for more than 100 years down the rights of way from Boston. The Greenbush line is itself an important "historic" part of Hingham and Cohasset — around which the "historic" villages grew — Hingham with its Station Street and Cohasset with its Depot Court and train station, now housing offices and Bernard's. This roadbed is probably more historic than many of the buildings along the way.

3. Environment: The wetlands we have now along the right of way are the same wetlands we had then and probably will have in the future because of our sea level and geography. The real damage to our environment comes from thousands of cars, trucks, and S.U.V.'s charging daily through our streets and up the "Expressway" to Boston, polluting the air and damaging the ozone layer.

4. Need: As a suburb of Boston where many of our citizens make their living, Cohasset is transportation handicapped. During 20 years of commuting, my husband and I had numerous nightmare trips to Boston and Cambridge, using all alternatives. Now retired, we can't get in an MBTA parking lot after 7:30 a.m. The boat does not take us anywhere near Cambridge or the other universities, museums, hospitals, State House, Symphony Hall, hotels, etc. As a senior citizen, if I need or want to go to cultural institutions, meetings, hearings or social engagements, I have to drive the Expressway, jockeying with muscle cars, lane switchers, trucks of all sizes and speeds. It is dangerous and I shouldn't have to do that. Parking in Boston is an expensive gamble. If we lived in any other upscale area of Greater Boston, we could take safe, quick, reliable commuter trains.

On Saturday we face another important need: override for school renovation. Even though my husband and I no longer have children in schools, we recognize this need and will certainly vote Yes. We hope that the young families and others who have worked so effectively on this issue will also recognize and support our need and that of other hard-pressed commuters whose taxes go predominantly for school costs and that our elected officials will respond positively.

COHASSET CARES

From Bangladesh to CEO and back again

By Alan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Town Meeting is over and my faith in Cohasset has been restored. PAYT was voted in, and the Recycling Committee will do its very best to help everyone. Together with the other votes, it is clear that townspeople want only the very best for our town, and we may all be proud. I have been asked to print what I said at Town Meeting, so here it is:

Trash is an important, ever-present part of our everyday lives.

But trash can also be the coin of the realm, ethically as well as financially.

Every one of us has to manhandle our daily load of trash. Some people in the world might well say that the best thing Americans do is throw things away. On average we Americans throw away 5 pounds of trash per person per day. We are a fraction of the world's population, but we use almost half of the world's energy.

Most Americans have a good life. Most Americans are decent people. Most Americans have a conscience. We all have a responsibility to the earth.

Sure, PAYT requires a bit more work, but it's a system based on fairness, and it's just thoughtfulness, respect for life in all its forms.

PAYT is the opportunity to improve ourselves both ethically and financially.

The financial savings from PAYT are great — both individually and as a town — and if we do not adopt it now, our future waste expenses will skyrocket.

I saw a color picture on the front page of the New York Times this week of a train running through the hovels in Bangladesh, where people live two feet from the tracks. Mothers have to tie up their little children to keep them off the tracks, but the article reported a child had been run over by the train recently. A woman living in the hovels said, "We have nothing and we are nothings." They live in the trash. Many survive only by means of it, washing and re-selling plastic bags or re-melting metal scraps in little fires.

And we would hesitate to separate our recyclables? Even when it would benefit us, in more ways than one?

Our trash is gold.

Almost everything we live with can be recycled. And it should be, for both economical and ethical reasons.

Why would a community like Cohasset vote down PAYT? Against the nearly 100 communities in Massachusetts that now do PAYT, it would appear as a moral slide.

If you're an American CEO or a Bangladesh nobody, you're both handling the coins of the realm. Re-engineering your company to maximize profits is on the same continuum with your putting the cardboard roll from the center of your toilet paper into the cardboard section of the RTF. Separating what's left over from the thing we obtained, whether on the Internet or in a Bangladesh dump, is one and the same continuum.

Please vote thoughtfully.

[And you did! See you next time.]

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee

Biotech 2000 has big news

The biggest news to come out of the recent Biotech 2000 convention in Boston is not the word that we may soon be able to cure cancer by eating tomatoes.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Better than that — we may soon be able to offer birth control to cockroaches.

As one who has lived for a time in Manhattan, where the roaches grow to the size of collies, and have been known to make off with small children, I can appreciate this scientific development.

Scientists at Cornell University say they are well on the road to modifying genes in cockroaches either to render them infertile or cool their interest in the opposite sex. I haven't figured which.

Scientists at Cornell University say they are well on the road to modifying genes in cockroaches either to render them infertile or cool their interest in the opposite sex, I haven't figured which.

And, PETA (People for Ethical Treatment of Animals) will be pleased to note, all this tampering with the little bug's personal life will do no harm to his or her physical being, although it may have consequences for their libidos.

Furthermore, the April issue of the journal Nature Genetics reports that researchers have discovered a defective gene in mice that prevents the storage of fat and thus makes Mickey slimmer and more attractive to Minnie.

Think of that while you're trying to struggle into last summer's bathing suit and wondering why ten pounds of cellulite won't fit into a five pound bag.

Out in California (where else?) they have found that 61 out of 6,000 genes have an effect on life changes between the ages of 9 and 90, a discovery that could lead to the eradication of the signs of aging if not the process of aging itself.

But don't throw away that Grecian Formula 9 or that wrinkle cream just yet. Dr. Richard Lerner and his team at the Scripps Research Institute in LaJolla, Calif., will tell you the control of aging is a long way off.

Don't laugh. The people who handle such things are already altering the genes in such crops as tomatoes, corn and soy beans to make them more resistant to plant diseases and herbicides.

This is done, in the case of a tomato, by mixing a gene from a flounder into the vegetable's genetic scheme to make it more resistant to freezing. I suppose this means you can keep tomatoes in the freezer.

No, this doesn't make a tomato look or taste fishy.

The next step is to find an anti-cancer gene in, say, an elephant and introduce it into an apple to give new meaning to the phrase, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away."

In spite of its potential for good works, a lot of people are a little leery of what are called "genetically modified organisms," which explains the protesters at the Biotech Convention last week.

They call the genetically altered tomatoes, corn and soy beans "frankenfood" after the monster in Frankenstein because its manufactured by Monsanto rather than grown by Former Brown.

I don't know what the cockroaches will call it.

LIBRARY CORNER

Historical drawings are on display

Now on display in the Reference Room is a series of lively full-color drawings that show Scituate Harbor as it was around 1915, back when streets were paved with gravel and cars were a sometimes frightening novelty.

The cartoon-like pictures were drawn by Cohasset doctor and artist Tom Eames. They give a panoramic view of the harbor, from Front Street to Second and Third Cliff and feature sights from Scituate's past and the famous town characters of the day in a humorous light. They have been passed down through the Eames family for several generations.

Bernard Mackenzie of Scituate saw the drawings and got permission to reproduce them in an illustrated calendar for 2000, which is being sold by the Scituate Historical Society. The first printing of 1,000 was sold out, but there remain about 200 still available. At $12.50 each, the calendars have raised $12,000 for the Historical Society. To order a calendar, call the society at 545-1083.

Magazine reviews

Do you listen to the Sunday afternoon radio broadcast of opera from the Metropolitan Opera? If so, Opera News is a magazine that will interest you. The library is now subscribing to this monthly magazine which gives a capsule view of the four operas that will be broadcast during the month. Each listing includes cast, story, background and many photos. The magazine also carries lively and lavishly illustrated articles about the opera world in New York and abroad, often focusing on a young rising star.

For those who cannot get to Washington as often as they might like, reading Smithsonian, the monthly magazine published by the Smithsonian Institution, may be the next best thing. It carries articles about new exhibits and gives a behind the scenes look at that prestigious museum. The February issue includes an article about the wonderful gargoyles on the National Cathedral (including Darth Vader). Another tells of the hardships and successes of a group of biologists doing fieldwork in the Iranian desert.

The children's room

Don't miss the Storytellers coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Sunday afternoons in April. The following programs will begin at 3:30 p.m. and last for about 45 minutes: April 2 and 16 Big Ryan's Tall Tales; April 9 and 30 Stories and Music by Beth Green.

These children's programs are sponsored by The Community Partnership for Children and are open for children ages 3-6 and their families.

Your bias is showing

TO THE EDITOR:

From your stories of the March Town Meeting, I seriously wondered if your reporter had on rose-colored glasses, especially when it came to the school articles. Nothing of the issues raised concerning the inaccuracies and misleading information contained in the $41.8 million school plan was revealed, nor was the contentious attitude of the school supporters toward residents who presented valid questions and concerns about this over-building project.

It would be refreshing to read fair and balanced reporting, especially on monetary issues that will have a long-term impact on all Cohasset taxpayers.

I wish that we could read the rest of the story before we have to cast our vote.

Pitt-Des Moines awarded water tank contract

The Pitt-Des Moines (PDM) company has been awarded the contract by the Water Commission to build the town's second water storage tank on Scituate Hill.

"We expect construction to start by the end of March," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "PDM will then have 250 days to complete the tank and have it on line, so if all goes as scheduled the new tank should be operational before New Year's Eve. A groundbreaking ceremony will be held near the end of April."

"This project is the most significant new construction in this water system since the Lily Pond Treatment Plant was built in 1978," said McNabb. "Water consumers will see a significant benefit from this new tank, since in addition to providing essential fire fighting water reserve for the town, the new tank will allow us to clean out the Bear Hill tank and then to flush the distribution system — improving the taste and odor of the water for all of our customers."

PDM was the lowest bidder, at $983,500, about $200,000 less than the engineering estimate of $1,188,070 for the project, which includes construction of the 1.8 million gallon tank as well as the water main to connect the tank to the distribution system. The only other bidder was Chicago Bridge & Iron, which bid $1,225,691.

The bids were opened Feb. 29, the contract was signed March 16 by the Water Commission, and a pre-construction conference was held March 17 at the treatment plant. The plans for the tank were approved Jan. 14 by the state Department of Environmental Protection.

"The year 2000 will also be one of our busiest construction years ever," said McNabb, "since in addition to the new tank our Year 2000 projects include:

replacing pipes on King Street, Black Horse Lane, Holly Lane and Stevens Lane

rehabilitating the Sohier Street and Elms Meadow wellfields, repairs to the treatment plant, replacement of about 20 fire hydrants replacement of about 10 valves and gates

"We also plan to bring the Cohasset Water Department into the 21st century," said McNabb, "by updating our existing long-range distribution system capital maintenance plan and by developing a long-range capital maintenance plan for the treatment plant and a long-range watershed protection plan."

SELECTMAN

Michael H. Sullivan

Name: Michael H. Sullivan
Age: 44
Years in town: 15
Address: 21 Commons Road
Occupation: Sullivan Associates (Executive Search)
Education: BS, BA Bryant College

Civic/municipal experience: Cohasset Board of Selectmen, 1992-98; Cohasset Board of Health, 1988-92; soccer and Little League coach

Reason for seeking office: I seek the office of selectman because I care about the town and want to preserve its many fine qualities. My 20 years of business and ten years of elected office experience will enhance my effectiveness on the board. I support strong fiscal management, quality education, effective preservation of our assets, and an open communicative style of government. More specifically, I support the proposed $41 million ($16 million cost to the town) school renovation project. It is the responsibility of our community to provide quality learning facilities that display respect to our students, teachers and administrators. It is also extremely important that these facilities are properly cleaned and maintained. Additionally, I would like to further explore opportunities to provide additional senior housing within the community.

Robert H. Sturdy

Name: Robert H. Sturdy
Age: 69
Years in town: 28
Address: 270 Jerusalem Road
Occupation: Retired
Education: MIT 1953
Civic/municipal experience: Brookline School Committee; chairman Cohasset School Facilities Committee, 1976-1983; Cohasset Planning Board, 1983-present.

Reason for seeking office
• To provide a program for the necessary renovations to our schools without placing a huge tax burden on the townspeople;
• To support the downtown and harbor revitalization effort by utilization of federal, state and private funding, and not local taxes;
• To engender a spirit of cooperation rather than antagonism with the MBTA, in order to provide the greatest benefit to the town when the Greenbush Line is restored.

The board of selectmen is one of the most challenging and demanding of all the boards in town. There is a need for a delicate balance of authority and responsibility, a balance of assisting and supporting the other town boards without overreaching. I think it is important to have a harmonious form of government when making decisions affecting the town. The needs of all the citizens need to be considered, and no decisions should be made that unduly benefit one group to the detriment of another. Compromises have to be made and innovative solutions to problems have to be found, which will provide fairness to all.

Leland H. Jenkins

Name: Leland H. Jenkins
Age: 56
Years in town: 21 years
Address: 198 Jerusalem Road
Occupation: Local Business Owner- 28 years
Education:
Tufts University - BS Civil Engineering
Civic Municipal Experience:
Capt. U.S. Army Medical Service Corps - Sanitary Engineer
Holbrook Planning Board
Cohasset Advisory Committee - 6 years
Trustee and Deacon Second Congregational Church
Volunteered on Osgood Play Park, Alumni Field and the Town Fuel Dispensing Center

Reason for seeking office:
I decided to run for the open seat based on my business background and my two terms on the Advisory Committee because I feel that I have something positive and concrete to offer the town. As a businessman, I have managed my own corporation for more than 25 years and know what it takes to keep a company operating efficiently. I will ensure that all issues brought before the Selectmen will be looked at for cost effective solutions. As a recent Advisory Committee member I am able to come into the job with a working knowledge of all town budgets. While on that committee I looked for alternative solutions and insisted on full disclosure of all issues. I want to continue with my goal of maximizing our services at a minimum cost to keep Cohasset a diverse community.

PLANNING BOARD

Chris Ford

Name: Chris Ford
Age: 58
Years in town: 1956 (less time away 64 to 81)
Address: 145 Border Street
Occupation: Realtor with Hunneman/Hallmark 100; former owner of Hallmark 100
Education: Cohasset High School, 59; Bridgewater State College, BS 1963; University of Hawaii, MA 1967; Michigan State University, PhD 1969
Civic Experience: School Committee 1987-1993; Osgood School Re-use Committee, Chairman; Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, Board of Directors
Reasons for Seeking Office: I feel that the planning board plays a critical role in shaping the character of the community and I would like to play an active role in that process. I feel that my professional and educational background along with my years of experience in the community provide me with the tools and the perspective to play a constructive role in the decision-making process of the planning board. Important as it is to preserve the beauty and character of our community, it is equally important that we take steps to insure that there is adequate affordable housing within Cohasset. I am especially concerned about the plight of many seniors who feel that they are being priced out of our town. I will be very open to creative and innovative proposals which will address this and related issues.

Randall D. Patterson

Name: Randall D. Patterson
Age: 36
Years in Town: 2
Address: 12 Ledgewood Farm Drive
Education: University of Connecticut, B.A. in Economics, 1986; University of Hartford, M.B.A. in Business Administration, 1996
Civic/Municipal Experience: None to date.
Reason for Seeking Office: I am seeking office of the planning board based upon my skills in the areas of planning, researching, facilitating and most importantly, decision making.

As our town continues to evolve, it is paramount that we continue to plan in advance in how we want our town to look. The planning board will continue to play a key role in this evolution and the individual elected to serve upon this board must have extensive skills. For those you who do not yet know me, within the Cohasset Mariner during the past month, I have offered views on several issues involving our town including recommended solutions.

If elected, I look forward to investing my time and energy to making sure that Cohasset retains its small town New England charm while at the same time evolving to meet the needs of its citizens.

LIBRARY TRUSTEE

Patience Garrick Towle

Name: Patience Garrick Towle
Age: 53
Years in town: 26
Address: 180 Lamberts Lane
Occupation: At home/spouse of Richard W. Towle Jr.
Education: Graduate of Green Mountain College
Civic/municipal experience: Board member and past president of the Friends of the Cohasset Library; board member since 1993 and chairwoman of the Board of Library Trustees since 1996.

Reason for seeking office: I would like to be reelected as library trustee and continue to coordinate the board, and the public and private resources of Cohasset for the library. Our new director, Janet Husband, our new building to be at the old Joseph Osgood School and our new policies demonstrate that we have a good team and that I have the time, interest and ability to contribute to the library.

Agnes McCann

Name: Agnes McCann
Age: 54
Years in town: 19
Address: 104 Doane St.
Occupation: Attorney/adjuster, Travelers Property Casualty Claim Dept.
Education: St. Lawrence Univ., 1968; Suffolk Law, 1977; Wayland HS, 1964.
Civic/municipal experience: Member, now chairman, Democratic Town Committee; library trustee since 1984.
Reason for seeking office: I love words, books and libraries in that order. I remember my first card in Wayland, and the freedom to take as many books home as I could carry the half-mile walk. I came to Cohasset and found a beautiful library, and have worked for years to keep it so. I would like to keep at it.

Lance Norris

Name: Lance Norris
Age: 37
Years in town: Moved to Cohasset in 1973
Address: 33 Norfolk Rd
Occupation: Writer
Education: BA from Whitman College, Washington State. MA, DOD from The Calgary Grace Bible Institute, South Carolina.
Reason for seeking office: Cohasset has a great library, but it has become far too much of a clique. Last year I took my kids to the Children's Museum using the library's passes. When I told a friend with small children about the great time we had, he had no idea the library offered museum passes. Other young parents I checked with were also in the dark about this great service.

Seventy percent of Cohasset has library cards, and yet on any given week less that 5 percent of those people come through the library doors. The Board of Trustees should work towards building a new library that attracts and engages all members of the community. One way to reach out to is to have a little more diversity on the Board.

If you don't think a little diversity is a good thing, you have missed the point of the last 40 years in America.

Carol A. Riley

Name: Carol A. Riley
Age: 55
Years in town: 23
Address: 483 Jerusalem Road
Occupation: Homemaker/volunteer. Former director of TV/radio publicity, J. Walter Thompson Co., New York.
Education: BA English, Calif. State University, Los Angeles.
Civic/municipal experience: Library trustee (2 years), Friends of the Library (board of directors, 3 years), library volunteer (5 years), Social Service League (exec. board 6 years), Red Cross Blood Program (16 years), Cohasset PSO, board (5 years).

Reason for seeking office: Having worked for two years with my eight fellow trustees, as well as with our new library director, I'm anxious to continue the process of creating a new library at the old Osgood School. Completing the trustees' application for a Commonwealth of Massachusetts grant of $1.45 million and helping coordinate a major fundraising campaign will head the list of projects I hope to get involved in.

The ongoing smooth operation of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is, of course, a priority. There are several interesting programs coming up: storytelling for the children and planned Internet tutoring for adults this summer. A newsletter for our patrons is now available at the circulation desk and a weekly newspaper column, "Library Corner," in the Mariner informs our public about library activities.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts

Name: Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts
Age: 59
Years in Town: 32
Address: 9 Jerusalem Road Drive
Occupation: Homemaker, volunteer, activist
Education: Elementary School: The Bell School, Lake Forest, Illinois 1954; Secondary School: Miss Porters School, Farmington, Conn. 1958; College: Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass. 1962
Civic/ Municipal Experience: Appointed to Cohasset Housing Partnership, Committee to Study the Structure and Function of Town Government, and the Citizen Sewer Advisory Committee. Member of League of Women Voters since 1969. Active in the leadership of First Parish Church. Member of Cohasset Democratic Town Committee.

Reason for seeking office: I wish to keep Cohasset a fine town to live in and raise children in. I believe that providing the opportunity for children to have a fine education is one of our most important responsibilities. As a member of the School Committee I can put my experience to work toward achieving the goal of making our school system the best it can be. I believe many of us can and should contribute our time and talents toward this goal, which will benefit us all, whether or not we currently have children in the schools. I look forward to working with everyone who shares my sense of responsibility and commitment at this time when so much is possible.

Rick Flynn

Name: Rick Flynn
Age: 41
Years/ Town: 12-1/2
Address: 30 Summer Street
Occupation: Senior Vice-President, Lehman Brothers Inc., Institutional Fixed Income Sales
Education: B.S. 1980 Fairfield University, Fairfield, Conn., Boston College High School 1976

Civic/ Municipal experience: Town of Cohasset Advisory Board Member, 1993 to 1999; Founding Member, Cohasset Education Foundation, vice- president 1991 to 1994; Cohasset Little League, various coaching positions; Cohasset Soccer Club, various coaching positions

Reason for Seeking Office:
My main reason for running for School Committee is to help maintain the excellence that has been exhibited by the Cohasset Schools academically while dealing with budget and renovation issues. I believe the experience I gained while serving on the Advisory Board will serve me well in working with the school budget issues.

The next few years will be very important years for the Cohasset schools. As we enter an era of major renovations for the schools, assuming the override passes, there are many issues to deal with. Trying to fix the physical aspects of the school buildings, with the least amount of disruption is going to be a challenge. There will continue to be budget challenges that must be dealt with in terms of the operating budget and the SPED budget. The most exciting part of this process is that Cohasset already has a superior education product. If we can get beyond maintenance and physical plant issues then many of our school administrators and teachers can focus full time on what we have hired them for, to educate. I also believe that from a morale standpoint the schools will be a better place.

That being said, we will continue to struggle with budgets. Renovated schools and increased enrollments will require a larger operating budget. We all must be realistic around that issue. Additionally it is important to look at the school and town budgets together and try to what's best to serve the entire towns needs and take some of the divisiveness out of the whole process.

If we all face these challenges together, I believe the best years for the Cohasset schools and the Town of Cohasset lie ahead.

HEALTH BOARD

Peggy (Margaret) Chapman

Name: Peggy (Margaret) Chapman
Age: 46
Years in town: 7-1/2
Address: 25 Virginia Lane
Occupation: Clinical specialist in psychiatric nursing, employed at Hardy Healthcare PC, Hingham.
Education: BSN Creighton University, Omaha; MS in psychiatric nursing, Boston University.
Civic/municipal experience: Community Garden Club of Cohasset, eucharistic minister, St. Anthony's.

Reason for seeking office: We moved to Cohasset in 1992 from Woburn. In addition to the watershed contamination identified in the book and movie "A Civil Action," Woburn is home to a Superfund cleanup site. These contaminations have remained a vivid reminder to me of how decisions we make today affect future generations. My experience in Woburn propelled me to become involved in SAFE in 1994. As a nurse for more than 20 years, I have been dedicated to people's health needs. I would like the opportunity to contribute to uphold the right we have in this country to protect our citizens in matters of public health.

YES NO

School override vote headlines election

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Much like last year, an override vote looms largest on the ballot for Saturday's annual town election.

But while last year's two override questions focused on a sewer project and the municipal budget, this year the focus is squarely upon the proposed $41.8 million renovation project of Deer Hill Elementary School and the middle-high school.

With the 60 percent reimbursement for which the town has been approved by the Mass. School Building Assistance Bureau, the cost to Cohasset taxpayers is estimated to be $16.7 million.

Should the override vote be approved by the necessary simple majority, Town Accountant Michael Buckley has estimated the average taxpayer in Cohasset, with a home valued at $358,500, can expect to pay a total of $10,291 over the 22-year period from FY 2002 to FY 2024. The average cost per year would be approximately $468, a cost per month of $39.

With such a costly override question on the ballot, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she expects voters to turn out in force on Saturday.

"I'm predicting a turnout of about 40 percent," Douglas said Tuesday. "Last year, we had 171 absentee ballots and ended up with a 46 percent turnout. So far, we've gotten 128 in this year and I expect more toward the end of the week."

Those casting their votes on the school renovation article will also have three candidates to choose from to fill the selectman's seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan. Former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins, planning board member Robert Sturdy and former selectman Michael Sullivan are all vying for the seat (see related story, page 1).

A race has also emerged for the planning board seat being vacated by John O'Toole. Former school committee member Chris Ford is running against Randy Patterson, who has not held a town office but held his neighborhood's battle against a cell tower on the Cohasset/Scituate border.

Patterson has said he is in favor of a Route 3A location for the town's Greenbush commuter rail station, while Ford supports the concept of a village train station. Both said the planning board needs to be diligent in improving the look of the highway business district along Route 3A.

The only other contested race on this year's ballot is for a seat on the Library Trustees. Incumbents Patience Towle, Agnes McCann, Carol Riley and challenger Lance Norris are running for the three available seats on the board.

Among the boards for which races will not be contested are the school committee, where Richard Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts are unopposed for the two open seats, the Board of Assessors, where incumbent Michael Patrolia will run unopposed, the sewer commission, with no challenge to incumbent Gary Vanderweil, and the water commission, where incumbent John McNabb is unopposed.

No candidates obtained nomination papers for the board of health, Cohasset Housing Authority, or the recreation commission, but a write-in candidate has emerged for each board.

Margaret Chapman, a registered nurse, will run as a write-in candidate for the board of health. She said her medical expertise will prove valuable on the board of health.

"I am running because I believe my experience and training, including my over 20 years as a nurse, and living in Woburn have prepared me well to deal with the diverse responsibilities of the board of health," Chapman wrote in announcing her campaign.

Chapman lived in Woburn just after the contaminated water scare in the town became public, which later became the basis for the movie "A Civil Action." She said the experience made her fully aware of environmental concerns regarding drinking water. She has been a member of the anti-landfill citizen group SAFE since 1994.

Joanne Young, 264 N. Main Street, has declared her write-in candidacy for the housing authority, while two write-in candidates have come forward to run for the recreation commission.

Wallace St. John, 35 Norfolk Road, who runs the town's youth soccer program, and Diana Remlinger, 13 Norfolk Road, a former member of the youth resources committee, will both seek a seat on the recreation commission.

Absentee ballots

Absentee ballots for the annual town election on April 8 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Friday, April 7, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.

Physical disability.

Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 8 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the OVAL to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Three running for selectman

are totally unrealistic. It's obvious this thing needs to get done."

In addition to his pro-renovation stance, Sullivan said his experience as a selectman in dealing with the municipal budget separates him from the other candidates.

"I think I'm much more realistic about where we have to go as a town from a tax and budgetary standpoint," Sullivan said. "Lee and Bob don't want to raise taxes. But it's hard to stay within the guidelines of Proposition 2 ½ without eroding services. If you want a town that's attractive from a real estate point-of-view, you can't do it without maintaining services."

Sturdy disputed Sullivan's categorization of his position on taxes, saying he realized residents will sometimes have to face tax bills which increase by more than 2 ½ percent.

"There will have to be overrides from time to time to keep municipal services going," Sturdy said. "My concern is that we don't keep piling on."

Jenkins also agreed that taxes will need to go up in the future, but said all expenditures need to be viewed with a more scrupulous eye.

"Of course we're going to have to raise taxes," he said. "I have no problem raising taxes. But when we do it, we need a damn good reason. I don't think a lot of the money we spend is spent wisely. I sit back and say 'Who's watching these things.' They need to be looked at more carefully."

As a member of the planning board, Sturdy has said the location of the Greenbush commuter rail station is another decision which needs to be looked at more carefully.

He and other members of the planning board voted 5-0 to ask selectmen to reconsider their 1997 vote in favor of a station on Route 3A. Sturdy said a downtown station is crucial to the revitalization of Cohasset Village.

Selectmen refused to reconsider their decision last month, saying they only wanted to hear new information which would have changed since 1997.

"The arrogance of the Board of Selectmen is one of the biggest problems in town government," Sturdy said. "Selectmen are not the king of the hill. They need to respect other town boards and get their input."

CANDIDATES CORNER

McKenna campaign

Mary Anne McKenna, a clinical research consultant and clinical counselor has joined the race for the third Plymouth District seat "to keep the seat Republican, to protect our community character, and to continue Mary Jeanette Murray's legacy of having a full-time state representative whom people can count on to address their needs on Beacon Hill."

Among the events McKenna attended recently were the Cohasset and Hull Town Meetings, the task force development meeting for the jet noise concerns along the waterfront, the Open House at the Allerton House Assisted Living Facility in Hingham, the DARE graduation at Notre Dame Academy and the ribbon ceremony at South School in Hingham. Last weekend, McKenna attended the Eagle Scout Awards Ceremonies at Wilder Hall and the Hingham Sports Foundation fund raiser.

A schedule of area coffees, as well as details about McKenna's kick-off fund raiser, to be held on May 5 from 6 to 10 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham will be forthcoming.

For more information about the McKenna campaign, call 749-5004.

Norton to head Holden campaign

Steve Norton of Hull has been selected to serve as the campaign manager for Mike Holden, a candidate for state representative in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Norton will be responsible for coordinating the varied aspects of the campaign including field organization, volunteer efforts and election day activities.

Norton is the former owner of the Bay Company in Hingham and manager of Nobles Camera Shop in Cohasset. He served as the president of Hingham/Hull Rotary from 1994-1995 and served on the executive board of the Boy Scouts of America, Old Colony Council.

Supporters kick off Bradley campaign

More than 250 people joined Garrett Bradley, a candidate for state representative, to celebrate the beginning of a season of grassroots politics and one-on-one voter contact.

Garrett was also joined by many local elected officials at his campaign event and was introduced by Democratic State committeeman and Cohasset selectman Fred Koed.

Bradley won the Democratic primary for this state representative seat in 1998 and ran a strong campaign against long-term incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray. With Murray retiring, Bradley is working to build upon his previous campaign and continue to earn support throughout the district. He has already begun going door-to-door in many neighborhoods to talk with voters one-on-one.

Bradley lives in Hingham with his wife, Heather and young daughter, Amanda. As state representative he hopes to improve education, reduce property taxes and fight to provide quality healthcare for all.

GOP committees to hold meetings

WWII memorial being rebuilt

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The World War II Memorial at the Cove, damaged during last year's project to rebuild flood culverts underneath Elm Street, is currently being repaired.

Also being patched up is the dispute between some veterans about whose names should appear on the memorial.

The issue between some veterans concerned the period between Aug. 14, 1945, when Japan officially surrendered, and Dec. 31, 1946, when Congress officially declared the end of the war.

The U.S. Government has long recognized those who served in the occupational forces after V-J Day as World War II veterans. Some Cohasset veterans, however, felt only those who heard a gun fired in anger should be listed on the memorial.

The issue has caused controversy since the memorial was built in 1993. Selectman Merle Brown, who has acted as a mediator in the dispute, said the names of those in the occupational forces will be included on the memorial, which is eventually planned to extend to those veterans from Cohasset who fought in every war, from the Revolution to Desert Storm.

"We've told those planning the memorial that they can't start on the World War I portion until their [those who served in the occupational forces] names are on there," Brown said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the work being done on the memorial by the St. John construction company is first-rate.

"They're doing a phenomenal job on it," Haddad said. "There is a foundation under there now, which didn't exist before. The plaques are just about to go back up."

Austin Ahearn, chairman of Cohasset Military Memorial, Inc., said the group is "in the process" of adding the names of those in the occupational forces to the memorial, but said he doubted the work would be completed by Memorial Day.

Cohasset Golf Club abutters concerned about expansion

"In their own published book, there are 887 total members, and 265 of those are only social members," she said. "That's 30 percent of the members who are there purely for use of the restaurant and lounge. That's adding traffic to Lamberts Lane and cars to their parking lot. Our problem is that they'll be able to expand their building and expand their parking lot without anyone checking up on them."

Golf Club president Cliff Mitman said the club does not have functions other than those typically associated with a private golf course.

"I don't know of a golf club which doesn't have dining facilities," Mitman said. "We have 320 full members and that hasn't changed in the 20-plus years I've been a member. The social members are social members because they get to play golf twice a month as the guest of a member. They can't get regular memberships because they're limited."

Mitman said the social functions at the club are strictly limited to members and their guests and are not open to the general public. He said the new addition being built at the club is not an attempt to build a spacious new restaurant at the facility.

"The new wing is not adding substantially to the size of the dining area," Mitman said. "All of our weddings, parties, and corporate outings are all sponsored by members of the club. We're not trying to open up the club's facilities to the public."

Mitman said he has met with Lamberts Lane residents in an attempt to provide screening for a new addition to the club's parking lot.

William Foley, 184 Lamberts Lane, said the club has done little to address the concerns of nearby residents.

"The efforts of the golf club have been half-hearted and insincere at best," Foley said. "At least half of the 30 residents of Lamberts Lane are here tonight in support of this appeal. We are taxpayers in this town and 55 percent of the golf club's members don't even live in Cohasset. We can't seem to find a golf club in a 20-mile radius which doesn't have to get a special permit for these kind of uses."

The Lamberts Lane residents in attendance burst into applause following Foley's comments, drawing the ire of zoning board chairman Woody Chittick.

"We're not going to have any clapping," Chittick said. "This isn't a popularity contest."

Mary Foley, 184 Lamberts Lane, said the golf club should be treated no differently than other membership clubs in town which require regulation for accessory uses.

"All member clubs in town need special permits for accessory uses," she said. "The golf club is clearly a membership club. The sailing club, the yacht club, and the Legion all have to get special permits. The golf club should have to as well."

Chittick said the screening of the new parking lot should be fairly simple to solve, but said the question of permitting requirements for an addition at the golf club may prove more challenging.

"The issue of expansion is one we'll have to wrestle with," he said.

Red Lion gas leak threatens village

Brook Street were also evacuated as were those on Elm Street from the village to the police and fire stations.

After about an hour, the village was declared safe and people were able to return to their residences or businesses.

Gas leaks have not been a common occurrence recently in town, but three did happen in 1998 on Linden Drive in conjunction with a sewer project.

In November 1998, the extreme danger presented by a damaged gas line manifested itself in Hingham, when the home of Richard and Anne Crowley was leveled by an explosion caused by a contractor hitting a gas line.

Noonan was thankful such a calamity was averted this time around.

"Had the Red Lion blown up, it could have taken out most of the village," he said.

Cohasset Hardware looks to add apartments

The owners of Cohasset Hardware appeared at Tuesday night's meeting of the zoning board of appeals to explain their proposal to add two apartments to the building, located at the corner of South Main Street and Elm Street.

Tina and Jim Watson said the two apartments will each be located partly on the second floor and partly on the third floor.

Apartments are allowed uses in the downtown business district, so long as they are divided between the second and third floors. Apartments which exist solely on the third floor are not allowed in the district.

Those living in the apartments would have access to the roof, the perimeter of which is to be bounded by a 42-inch railing.

Special permits are required because the plan would not meet setback and area requirements, but zoning board members showed little opposition to the plan.

"I feel comfortable with it from a zoning point of view," said zoning clerk Barbara Power. "My only concern is with the building code."

Building Commissioner Bob Egan said the major difficulty with the proposal would be squeezing in two means of egress from the apartments, which is required in the building code. Tina Watson said the primary means of egress to the apartments will be from Elm Street.

Egan said parking for the apartments could also be a problem, as it was when the Independence Building was discussed as a residence.

Tina Watson said she and her brother were scheduled to go before the planning board for a site plan review April 12.

Zoning board member Jane Goedecke said the plan could be a positive sign of things to come in Cohasset.

"I love the idea of having more apartments in town," she said.

Kingston's John Noland was the first place finisher in the race in a time of 33 minutes and 12 seconds.

Noland cruises to 10K win

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Kingston's John Noland passed the 4-mile mark in Sunday's Cohasset Road Race By-the-Sea 10K with the toughest section of the challenging course behind him and a 15-second lead on South Boston's David Dugan.

Noland, who runs competitively for the Boston Athletic Association, pretty much knew he had first-place sewn up. "I think, deep down, it was before that," said Noland, who registered his first Cohasset win in 33 minutes, 12 seconds. "But you don't take anything for granted."

If Dugan (second place, 33:40) had mounted a charge at Noland on the rolling section of Forest Ave., the Kingston resident was more than ready to react to any challenge Dugan used, whether it was a sustained drive over the final two miles, or a wait-and-kick strategy.

"I was prepared for a long surge," said Noland. "This is a nice course. It's not a quick course by any means but that's what's good about road racing."

From the start, it was apparent the race would become a two-runner duel between Noland and Dugan. The pair passed through the opening mile in a somewhat conservative

> John Noland

5:10. Dugan then pushed a few steps in front of Noland, running mile two in five minutes (10:10).

Noland edged forward and put a 10-second gap between Dugan and himself along Jerusalem Road. He ran a 5:22 third mile (15:32) but was hardly taking his lead for granted. "I knew this wasn't over," he said. "I really didn't shake him until four."

Noland hufled his way through the tough fourth mile, and the hills that went along with it, in 5:50 (21:22). He regained the spring in his step to post a 5:19 fifth mile (26:41) and ran uncontested to the finish line, 28 seconds in front of Dugan.

For Noland, the win was his first in three tries.

Noland admitted he ran a hard nine-mile workout the previous day and didn't feel especially sharp. He believes, though, the sluggishness had more to do with a long flight home from Anaheim where he traveled on business. Overall, Noland is happy with his training and overall conditioning. He averages 50-60 miles per week and takes one or two days off because of his work schedule. Noland concentrates on high-quality runs, including long intervals for speed work.

"When I go out for run it's a 10-mile run," he said. "My long runs are between 13 and 15 miles."

DeVito's three of a kind

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Senior Kevin DeVito, in almost four years in Cohasset High School, has played goalie for a playoff soccer team, wrestled in the finals of a sectional wrestling meet, and is currently being scouted by Div. 1 colleges for his talent on the lacrosse field.

"I like doing three sports," said DeVito. "It keeps me active and in shape. [Soccer, wrestling and lacrosse] all require different skills and have different demands."

As impressive as his athletic resume is in all three sports, it appears lacrosse will be the only sport in which DeVito will continue. A tri-captain of this year's squad, along with seniors Travis Moore and Brad Powell, DeVito has been the starting goalie for two seasons.

"Lacrosse is definitely my favorite sport," DeVito mentioned.

As a junior, DeVito was selected

DEVITO, PAGE 12

Kevin DeVito (black shirt), and Ronan Buick get their medals from the 1999 Bay State Games for lacrosse. DeVito is the goalie for the Cohasset High team, while Buick is a junior and long stick middle for the Skippers.

Lax teams take aim at tourney

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team will be led by senior tri-captains Kevin DeVito in goal, attackman Travis Moore and defenseman Brad Powell.

Coach Paul Sporn, in his second year, looks for solid play and improvement from all three. Junior letterman Geoff McWilliams, freshman Nick Spinto, and possibly senior letterman Bill Good are expected to be joining Powell on defense.

Junior defenseman Ronan Buick, a two-year starter, may move to offense as Sporn looks for ways to take pressure off high-scoring Moore. Sharing time in goal with DeVito will be sophomore letterman Kyle Webber.

Other attackmen will be sophomore lettermen Jason Moore and Paul Previte, and freshman Curtis Kahn. The midfield should have considerable depth, despite a senior-ending injury to junior Justin Langham.

Senior Tom Anderson, juniors Lane Forrer and Pete Whorisky, sophomores Peter Kovach, David DeVito and Sean Chase, and freshmen Robert Hickey, Matt Davis and John Durkin all figure into Sporn's plans.

"We'll use the preseason to decide who plays where," said Sporn before the start of the regular season. "Our goal is to return to the playoffs for the first time in three years, and then to do some damage in the new Div. 2 state tournament."

The varsity girls lacrosse teams again face a challenging schedule in the Eastern Mass. South League. The Skippers are led by senior co-captains defender Jacquelene Kahan, a two-time Bay State Games gold medalist, and second home Jenny Chastain, a threat on both offense and defense.

Other senior returnees include five-year starter Emily Libby, cover point Caitlin Stansell, and goal-scorer Carolyn Cameron. Other defense returnees are juniors Clara Sceery and Maggie O'Connor, and sophomores Maggie O'Neil, Carlie Carter, and Suzi Lynner.

Coming back on offense will be juniors Kate Bosworth, Kelly Devine, and Andi Shaughnessy, and sophomores Kristin Sheerin, Katie Grimm, Becky Ross, and Emma Gardner.

An outstanding crop of freshmen include Sara Genovese, Gia Petrakis, Maura McKenney, Katie Portanova, Yasmin Afshar, Julie Lordan, Rachel Smith, Katherine Coyne, Sarah Brady and Caitlin Rohrer.

by coaches across the league to the second team All Pilgrim Conference.

"He is a standout athlete, intensely competitive, and very hard working," praised second year varsity lacrosse coach Paul Sporn.

Also a captain of the wrestling team, along with seniors Joe Carbone, Chris Pratt and Liam O'Donnell, DeVito qualified for the Division 3 state competition, in which he took fourth place.

"I have been wrestling for six years, and it seems like it was all building up to this season," remarked DeVito, who started wrestling as a seventh grader. "This year, I put everything I have learned to use."

Though coach Torin Sweeney would like to see DeVito compete at the college level in wrestling, he still gives DeVito his blessing in whatever sport he pursues.

"I wish him the best of luck," Sweeney stated. "He was a pleasure to coach for six years, but once you get up to college, you pretty much have to pick one sport. Besides, going from high school wrestling to college is like going from high school basketball to the pros."

And then there was soccer. DeVito closed out a sensational career as Cohasset's goalie by leading the Skippers to the playoffs. Included in the postseason was an intense, overtime win against a heavily favored Westport squad, the number one seed of the playoffs.

"Upsetting the number one seed was my best athletic moment in high school," remembered DeVito, a co-captain along with the only other senior on the team, Ben Peterson. "I had never been to the playoffs before. It was really exciting. There were only two seniors on this years team. I am sure they will be even better next year."

While his accomplishments on the field and mat continue to impress many, it is his all-around leadership qualities that make coaches want him on their team.

"He has been a tremendous leader all year," said Sweeney. "He leads by example, and never quits. Those are qualities that are great to see in athletes."

"He is very coachable and easy-going. He leads quietly and by example," agreed Sporn.

DeVito comes from a gifted athletic family. His older sister, Laura, holds multiple swimming records at her college, Colgate. DeVito's younger brother, David, now a sophomore at Cohasset High School, is a talented member of both the soccer and lacrosse teams at CHS.

Regardless of where Kevin DeVito ends up, in college and beyond, everyone in Cohasset wishes him all the best.

"I am sure he will be a standout at the collegiate level. Wherever he goes, he will definitely be a contributor," said Sporn.

Tryout scheduled for adult baseball

The Year 2000 game plan for the 13th-year Boston Men's Senior and Adult Baseball Leagues includes player recruitment, sponsorship pitches, securing more playing fields, and team expansion from its Greater Boston and South Shore base to the North Shore and Cape Cod.

The Boston-based affiliate of the National MSBL/MABL has teams in three age divisions for players 18 and older: MABL (18-29), MSBL (30-and-older) and MSBL 40+ (40-and-older). Last year, Boston MSBL/MABL fielded 45 teams with more than 800 players, including one 63-year-old.

Local teams include the South Shore Rangers, the Scituate Mariners, the Scituate Twins, East Bridgewater Blue Jays, Braintree Rockies, Duxbury Cardinal and Braintree Dodgers, who all play in the National League.

New player tryouts are scheduled for Sunday, April 9, at Cleveland Circle in Brighton: MSBL 40+ - 9:30-11 a.m., MSBL 30 - 11 a.m.-12:30 p.m., MABL (A-L 12:30-2 p.m., MABL (M-Z) - 2-3 p.m. The rain date is the following Sunday at the same times and site.

For more information about the Boston MSBL/MABL, call 617-BASEBALL or visit its Web site at www.bostonbaseball.com.

Baseball players in Eastern Massachusetts, whose high school or college careers had concluded, were virtually without hardball options prior to the establishment of the Boston MSBL/MABL, excluding those talented enough to play in amateur/semi-pro leagues like the Boston Park, Intercity, and Cranberry. Boston MSBL/MABL offers high-quality, well organized, competitive baseball played in a recreational setting.

Games are usually played Sundays and one weekday night a week, beginning in early May and ending at the end of August.

Sunrise Assisted Living celebrates two years in Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Like a lot of two-year-olds, Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset is beginning to make its mark on the community around it.

In its first year in town , most of the senior citizens who came to Sunrise had been living in warmer climates such as Florida or Arizona, but had family locally. As Sunrise celebrates its second birthday, more local seniors have become accustomed to the concept of assisted living.

"Seniors are getting more comfortable with the concept of assisted living," said Sunrise assisted living coordinator Wendy Borsari. "They're getting to know us a bit better. We've got a big Scituate population and three or four of our residents are from Cohasset. Most of the families are local, so they can check on their mothers or fathers."

According to Sunrise director of community relations Jacquie McCarthy, assisted living serves as alternative between home health care and nursing homes.

"We help people with some of the activities of daily living, such as bathing or dressing, while trying to ensure the seniors stay as independent as possible," McCarthy said. "In a very dignified way, we help the seniors perform tasks they're having trouble with. There aren't the sterile walls of a nursing home, but there's a trained staff to help them when they need it."

Sunrise has 62 apartments, which range in size from small studios to two-room suites. Apartments are equipped with a refrigerator and a kitchenette. As a safety precaution, the apartments do not have stoves, but residents may bring microwaves if they wish. The bathrooms are completely handicapped-accessible.

While the rooms have wall-to wall carpeted and can be furnished if requested, residents are able to decorate their rooms however they like.

"This is their home," Borsari said. "They can bring their own furniture, they can put up wallpaper, whatever they want. There was one lady who wanted a pink living room and a blue bathroom, so that's what she did."

For a fee which ranges from $65 to $145 per day ($99 per day equates to $3,000 per month), depending on the size of the senior's apartment, seniors get three home-cooked meals per day, social and educational programs, laundry service, utilities, housekeeping, and the assistance they need with their daily tasks.

"We provide services across the board," McCarthy said. "We make sure their eating right, hydrating properly, and taking their medications. It gives families tremendous comfort to know those things will be taken care of."

> "In a very dignified way, we help the seniors perform tasks they're having trouble with."
> —Jacquie McCarthy, Sunrise director of community relations

McCarthy said many families may be doing themselves and their elderly relatives a disservice by trying to care for them at home.

"A lot of people try to have home health aides, but it's very expensive to have someone there 24 hours," she said. "Also, socializing is a huge thing. You may think you're doing your parent a favor by keeping her at home, but she's alone until you get home from work or the kids get home from school. There's a lot to do here, and it really opens their world back up again."

Sunrise holds social events for seniors such as movies, bridge, line dancing, parties, and a book club, which just read Tom Brokaw's homage to World War II veterans, "The Greatest Generation."

McCarthy said one of the most important functions is to assist seniors while allowing them to maintain their dignity.

"Just because you can't do things physically anymore, it doesn't mean your brain is going," she said. "We do incontinence care here, which can be very embarrassing for people. It's a dignity thing for them, and we can make it a non-issue."

As she looked out at one group of seniors on a couch watching the television news and another chatting in the lobby, McCarthy said assisted living can be a welcome change from a sterile nursing home environment.

"There's a lot of love in this building," she said. "The residents have us and they have each other. All of us have a passion for working with seniors."

ASP yard sale

This spring cleanup can help others this year when donating unwanted furniture, toys, sports equipment, kitchen goods, art work, boats, books, knicknacks, and other "treasures" to the Appalachia Service Project's (ASP) annual yard sale. The yard sale is scheduled form 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, April 8, at the Second Congregational Church.

Donated items may be dropped off at the church anytime . Pickups for larger items may be arranged.

All proceeds will benefit the 2000 Appalachia Service Project. The Cohasset ASP is a group of local high school students, college students and adult volunteers, who travel annually to the Appalachia Mountain region to participate in the Appalachia Service Project, Inc. a national home repair ministry. In the past 31 years, more than 125,000 volunteers have repaired more than 9,000 homes in Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Led by the Rev. Gary and Judy Ritts of the Second Congregational Church, this ecumenical group of 100 teenagers plus 40 adult advisors will make its 13th annual pilgrimage on June 24 to July 2. The group will travel to Kentucky and join others from all over the United States in a week of service to provide warmer, drier and safer housing for our neighbors in Appalachia.

Put These Business Experts to Work for You.

One of the most important, long-term relationships that a growing business can establish is a one-on-one relationship with a committed commercial banker. Aside from the obvious financial services, a personal banker offers advice and valuable insights on a wide range of business matters. After all, an experienced banker has a broad background that includes working with many businesses and is committed to the success of both your business and the community.

Bob Petrie, senior vice president; John O'Connor, president; and Tricia Dandrow, vice president.

Unfortunately, with the disturbing number of bank mega-mergers here on the South Shore, it's getting harder and harder for small to medium size businesses to find a bank that can, or will, give them the close attention and respect they need and deserve. Which is why Rockland Savings Bank is fast becoming such an important business resource.

Rockland Savings Bank has brought together a team of some of the best known and most respected commercial bankers on the South Shore. Bank president and CEO John O'Connor assigned Bob Petrie to establish and run the bank's entire lending function and Tricia Dandrow was appointed to head up the commercial banking division. Their combined experience, enthusiasm and long-standing dedication to the growth of the South Shore is unrivaled. Their considerable strengths are backed by a solid bank with a 132-year history of service to this community.

Rockland Savings Bank provides capital and alternative financial solutions for start-up businesses, mergers and acquisitions, buyouts, business expansion, debt re-financing, equipment purchasing, and working capital for growing companies. Their business banking services include free commercial checking and savings, cash management services, letters of credit, commercial construction loans, as well as many other services. In addition, they offer you something else: your own, experienced business banker who takes the time to get to know you and your company. They have the authority to make decisions, so approvals can be made in hours not days, and loan policies are based on relationships not formulas.

So call 781-878-5252 and ask to speak to John, Bob, or Tricia. They'll be happy to show you what the innovative involvement of a dedicated banker can do for you and your company.

Eradicating hate is focus of talk

By Jonathon Eder
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Barbara R. Pettis of Newburyport will address the issue of eradicating hate and fear in human lives in a talk, entitled "Love Has No Enemies," to be given Saturday, April 8, at 3 p.m., at the Hingham Public Library, the Whiton Memorial Room.

In a recent interview, Pettis stressed the importance of this topic on healing hate and fear.

"In this talk I will be using a lot of examples from my own life and my children's lives of how gaining a better understanding of God's love has resolved hate and fear-related problems. This is no fuzzy-wuzzy, feel-good type of thinking," Pettis said, "it is something practicable and applicable."

Pettis explained in the interview that hate often derives from fear: "fear of being left out, of being alone, of being not as good as others, of not having as much as others; fear of change or newness.

"Christ Jesus dealt with hatred. How did he handle it?"

The answer Pettis assured was through love, but not simply human love, but through an application of an all encompassing, universal love, God's love.

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Hingham, which is sponsoring the talk, invited Pettis to speak on this topic in part to support other local efforts at addressing problems of harassment, intolerance and hate. A church member drew attention to the "No Place For Hate Zone" program, which is sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League. Communities like Hingham and Cohasset have enrolled in the program and are in the process of qualifying as "No Place For Hate Zones." Communities in the program provide educational awareness, like training in the high schools where students learn to recognize influences which can spawn intolerance and abuse, and, so, reject them, so that there is "no place for hate."

Barbara R. Pettis

Pettis has been deeply involved in the educational programs in the various communities where she has lived. She has helped to establish crisis-response teams in their schools.

Pettis majored in architecture at the University of Oklahoma and Texas A & M University. Later, she worked as a free-lance writer and editor. She is a practitioner of spiritual healing, an authorized teacher of Christian Science, and a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship.

Pettis travels throughout North America and abroad, speaking to radio, television, and live audiences on the subjects of spirituality, prayer, and how one can all find freedom from the limitations and challenges of daily living through application of the ideas found in the best-selling book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, the discoverer and founder of Christian Science.

Alpha course at Beechwood

Do you have questions about the meaning of life, the Christian faith, who Jesus is and what his death has to do with us? Bring your questions, friends, and join them for dinner.

The Alpha Course is being held at Beechwood Church, 51 Church St., in Cohasset, every Wednesday evening through the end of April. Those currently attending represent St. Anthony's Catholic Church, area Protestant churches and those not affiliated with any church. Pastor Olivia Peters of the Four Square Church in Weymouth is partnering with Susan Carr and Linda Snowdale to lead the course.

Please note the time change; the complimentary dinner will be served at 6:30 p.m. and the course will conclude promptly at 8:30 p.m. Following dinner, an entertaining Alpha Course video will be shown on various topics, explaining the fundamental principles of Christian faith. Dessert and a short response to the video complete the evening. Call 383-9131 to register.

Mixed-use building proposed for King Street triangle

Group of abutters objects to plan

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The owner of the construction yard and gravel stockpile located at the corner of King Street and Route 3A wants to construct a mixed-use building on the property, but King Street residents are unsure the proposal would be any better for their neighborhood than the universally recognized eyesore already there.

Owner Joseph Rosano would like to construct a two-story replica of a house on Cohasset Common on the property. The first floor of the building would be reserved for office space and the second would be divided into two apartments.

Rosano would reserve a small portion of the first floor for an office to house his motor vehicle sales company.

Plans for the property show a significant amount of landscaping to be done to provide green space around the building and screening for the parking area, which is slated to include 20 spaces. The total area of the building is to be 1740 square feet.

Though the parcel of land on which the construction yard sits is in a residential district, its use as a construction yard predated zoning and was grandfathered.

Rosano's attorney, Kevin Gaughen, told the zoning board of appeals Tuesday night that using the land to house the proposed structure is far more beneficial to the King Street neighborhood and the town as a whole.

"Essentially, this is Mr. Rosano's attempt to get rid of a very obvious eyesore," Gaughen said. "He's sick of people scowling at him, and wants to do something with the property which is useful to himself and others. The construction yard and stockpiling there now is quite detrimental to the neighborhood and the town. Nobody wants to look at it. This structure will be better for neighbors and the residents of the town."

"I'd just like to make the property look better. I'm embarrassed to say I own it."
— Joseph Rosano

Gaughen asked that Rosano be able to display between one and three used cars for sale at the corner of the lot facing 3A.

"From time to time, Mr. Rosano would like to expose a car for sale," Gaughen said. "These are high-end cars such as Rolls-Royces and Ferraris. Mr. Rosano reconditions them for sale. We're not talking about a used car lot. He only does three to four cars a year."

A group of King Street residents is not enamored with the proposal, however. Attorney Myrna Putziger, representing Daniel Cotton, 27 King St., William Park, 36 King St., and Deborah Jenks, 43 King St., said the use of the property proposed by Rosano will be detrimental to the surrounding neighborhood.

"That property can be built upon as a single-family home, and it's adjacent to a beautiful residential neighborhood," Putziger said. "To introduce a used car lot, offices, and multi-family housing as gateway to that neighborhood is not an acceptable use."

Gaughen said the location of the property precludes it from use as a lot for a single-family house.

"The property is surrounded by three roads," Gaughen said. "There are substantial hardships on what can be built on an island. It's not an appropriate space for a house."

Zoning board member Anson Whealler asked Gaughen why the land would be appropriate for apartment housing but would be insufficient for a single-family home. Gaughen said the danger which children would face on the property would likely preclude a family from purchasing the parcel.

"If you build a house, the presumption is people wanting to move there will probably have kids," he said. "This piece of land is in between three roads and not really suitable to children. With apartments, it's likely it won't be someone with children moving in."

"It really isn't a place to put a house," Rosano said. "No one in their right mind would want to raise a family there. I envision the apartments for people who are between jobs, or just had a divorce, more like temporary housing. I'd just like to make the property look better. I'm embarrassed to say I own it."

No building permits for Beach Street lots

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There's a new player, but it's an old problem.

Stephen Glover of Sudbury who has owned one of the Beach Street lots in question for about a year would like to build a house there.

After all, the 19-acre site has an approved septic system and is "buildable" according to a map signed by the planning board that he obtained from the registry of deeds.

So what's the problem?

Building inspector Robert Egan denied issuing building permits to both Stover and his abutter Ellen Morrisey, who would like to build two homes on two lots on the remaining 12 acres she owns next to Stover's. At one time Morrisey owned all three lots.

Both the property owners appealed Egan's denial to issue building permits and presented their case to the zoning board Monday.

After two hours of discussion that included testimony from both sides, the zoning board found it had grounds to back Egan's permit denials.

In Glover's case, there is a setback issue that doesn't meet with zoning regulations. The zoning board also said too much fill would be removed from the site to construct the driveway, another violation. Morrissey's lots would share a driveway that must cross wetlands requiring a small bridge. The zoning board said there were not adequate sidelines for the structure.

Both property owners can apply for zoning board relief through the special permit process.

But Glover said the problems with his plans are solvable without needing that step.

He explained that his plans were not in complete detail, such as calculations for fill removal, because he had understood Egan to tell him to "just go before the zoning board with what you have." He said the sheered ledge would be used as stonework for the house and not be removed from the property and that the house could be moved to meet the setback requirements.

But Beach Street neighbors who turned out in force were opposed to any plan for the three lots.

And they've been delivering the same message for years.

Louis Eaton, 30 Beach St., said he'd been to numerous meetings over the years concerning proposals to develop the lots before a range of town boards.

"It is not a place where a house ought to be built, it is as simple as that," he said referring to Glover's lot.

"It is not a place where a house ought to be built, it is as simple as that."
— Louis Eaton, 30 Beach St.

He also said that no salt could be used on the driveways in the winter for environmental reasons.

"You won't be able to get up and down them," he said.

Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St., had the same questions for both properties. He questioned whether police and fire vehicles could access the property owners — which would all have sloped driveways — in the most extreme conditions and how heavy equipment would get up there during construction.

Richard Henderson, an attorney representing one of the neighbors, said zoning laws were not passed to benefit landowners but to protect neighbors who should not have to come back time and time again to hearings on the issue. He also complained that plans presented by Morrisey and Glover were too vague.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Glover explained the slope for his driveway would average 10.7 percent, state guidelines for wheelchair ramps are 8 percent.

"Other grades in Cohasset are steeper," he said.

Stover, who has a potential buyer for the proposed house, said he should be able to build there despite the ledge and slope.

"When I am up there, I see them (neighboring houses) there, and wonder, 'why can't I be here?'" he asked. "The whole town is rock."

MS walk steps toward a cure

On April 8 thousands of friends and neighbors will take steps to find a cure for multiple sclerosis.

The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk begins at 10 a.m. on Saturday, April 8, at the South Shore Community Center with a 10K route through the town and along the shore of Cohasset Sandy Beach. The Cohasset By the Sea MS Walk, presented by the Central New England Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, is one of 21 walks across Massachusetts and New Hampshire united by one goal—to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system with life-long physical and emotional effects.

Holocaust survivor to speak at NDA

Notre Dame Academy in Hingham will be presenting a week-long awareness program, Respect for Difference, April 10 to 14.

The goal of the week is to foster, through knowledge, awareness and dialogue, an increased respect for the many differences that are experienced in the NDA, as well as the world community. The Student Support Team sponsors the program.

On April 10, Collette Howe '01 will present her original composition "World of Colors" accompanied by soloist Kathleen Szymczyk '01. Finder will describe what her life was like as a Polish Jew before, during and after World War II. There will be an opportunity to ask questions after her presentation.

During the week, each academic department will incorporate the topic of Respect for Difference into its curriculum. An essay contest is planned. The Multicultural Club will present a program dealing with stereotyping based on appearance. Each member of the NDA Community will be asked to develop a personal plan of action. The plans, based on what has been learned during the week, will identify specific ways to combat discrimination and to empower all of us to create change. The personal plans of action will be incorporated into the closing Liturgy that will be celebrated Friday, April 14.

Mixed-use building proposed for King Street triangle

Group of abutters objects to plan

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The owner of the construction yard and gravel stockpile located at the corner of King Street and Route 3A wants to construct a mixed-use building on the property, but King Street residents are unsure the proposal would be any better for their neighborhood than the universally recognized eyesore already there.

Owner Joseph Rosano would like to construct a two-story replica of a house on Cohasset Common on the property. The first floor of the building would be reserved for office space, and the second would be divided into two apartments.

Rosano would reserve a small portion of the first floor for an office to house his motor vehicle sales company.

Plans for the property show a significant amount of landscaping to be done to provide green space around the building and screening for the parking area, which is slated to include 20 spaces. The total area of the building is to be 1740 square feet.

Though the parcel of land on which the construction yard sits is in a residential district, its use as a construction yard predated zoning and was grandfathered.

Rosano's attorney, Kevin Gaughen, told the zoning board of appeals Tuesday night that using the land to house the proposed structure is far more beneficial to the King Street neighborhood and the town as a whole.

"Essentially, this is Mr. Rosano's attempt to get rid of a very obvious eyesore," Gaughen said. "He's sick of people scowling at him, and wants to do something with the property which is useful to himself and others. The construction yard and stockpiling there now is quite detrimental to the neighborhood and the town. Nobody wants to look at it. This structure will be better for neighbors and the residents of the town."

"I'd just like to make the property look better. I'm embarrassed to say I own it."
— Joseph Rosano

Gaughen asked that Rosano be able to display between one and three used cars for sale at the corner of the lot facing 3A.

"From time to time, Mr. Rosano would like to expose a car for sale," Gaughen said. "These are high-end cars such as Rolls-Royces and Ferraris. Mr. Rosano reconditions them for sale. We're not talking about a used car lot. He only does three to four cars a year."

A group of King Street residents is not enamored with the proposal, however. Attorney Myrna Putziger, representing Daniel Cotton, 27 King St., William Park, 36 King St., and Deborah Jenks, 43 King St., said the use of the property proposed by Rosano will be detrimental to the surrounding neighborhood.

"That property can be built upon as a single-family home, and it's adjacent to a beautiful residential neighborhood," Putziger said. "To introduce a used car lot, offices, and multi-family housing as gateway to that neighborhood is not an acceptable use."

Gaughen said the location of the property precludes it from use as a lot for a single-family house.

"The property is surrounded by three roads," Gaughen said. "There are substantial hardships on what can be built on an island. It's not an appropriate space for a house."

Zoning board member Anson Whealler asked Gaughen why the land would be appropriate for apartment housing but would be insufficient for a single-family home. Gaughen said the danger which children would face on the property would likely preclude a family from purchasing the parcel.

"If you build a house, the presumption is people wanting to move there will probably have kids," he said. "This piece of land is in between three roads and not really suitable to children. With apartments, it's likely it won't be someone with children moving in."

"It really isn't a place to put a house," Rosano said. "No one in their right mind would want to raise a family there. I envision the apartments for people who are between jobs, or just had a divorce, more like temporary housing. I'd just like to make the property look better. I'm embarrassed to say I own it."

No building permits for Beach Street lots

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There's a new player, but it's an old problem.

Stephen Glover of Sudbury who has owned one of the Beach Street lots in question for about a year would like to build a house there.

After all, the 1.9-acre site has an approved septic system and is "buildable" according to a map signed by the planning board that he obtained from the registry of deeds.

So what's the problem?

Building inspector Robert Egan denied issuing building permits to both Stover and his abutter Ellen Morrisey, who would like to build two homes on two lots on the remaining 12 acres she owns next to Stover's. At one time Morrisey owned all three lots.

Both the property owners appealed Egan's denial to issue building permits and presented their case to the zoning board Monday.

After two hours of discussion that included testimony from both sides, the zoning board found it had grounds to back Egan's permit denials.

In Glover's case, there is a setback issue that doesn't meet with zoning regulations. The zoning board also said too much fill would be removed from the site to construct the driveway, another violation. Morrissey's lots would share a driveway that must cross wetlands requiring a small bridge. The zoning board said there were not adequate sidelines for the structure.

Both property owners can apply for zoning board relief through the special permit process.

But Glover said the problems with his plans are solvable without needing that step.

He explained that his plans were not in complete detail, such as calculations for fill removal, because he had understood Egan to tell him to "just go before the zoning board with what you have." He said the sheered ledge would be used as stonework for the house and not be removed from the property and that the house could be moved to meet the setback requirements.

But Beach Street neighbors who turned out in force were opposed to any plan for the three lots.

And they've been delivering the same message for years.

Louis Eaton, 30 Beach St., said he'd been to numerous meetings over the years concerning proposals to develop the lots before a range of town boards.

"It is not a place where a house ought to be built, it is as simple as that," he said referring to Glover's lot.

— Louis Eaton, 30 Beach St.

He also said that no salt could be used on the driveways in the winter for environmental reasons.

"You won't be able to get up and down them," he said.

Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St., had the same questions for both properties. He questioned whether police and fire vehicles could access the property owners — which would all have sloped driveways — in the most extreme conditions and how heavy equipment would get up there during construction.

Richard Henderson, an attorney representing one of the neighbors, said zoning laws were not passed to benefit landowners but to protect neighbors who should not have to come back time and time again to hearings on the issue. He also complained that plans presented by Morrisey and Glover were too vague.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Glover explained the slope for his driveway would average 10.7 percent, state guidelines for wheelchair ramps are 8 percent.

"Other grades in Cohasset are steeper," he said.

Stover, who has a potential buyer for the proposed house, said he should be able to build there despite the ledge and slope.

"When I am up there, I see them (neighboring houses) there, and wonder, 'why can't I be here?'" he asked. "The whole town is rock."

Post prom party

The Cohasset Post Prom Committee is planning its third annual "After the Prom All-Night Party" to be held at Cohasset High School Thursday, June 1.

This party is intended to serve several purposes. Initially, to present as a gift to graduating seniors a "going away party" in appreciation of their hard work and accomplishments. Secondly, to provide a drug- and alcohol-free party where they can relax, have fun, and share a last evening as a group. Thirdly, to provide a vehicle whereby the entire community, as a whole family, can share in the celebration of its young people.

In order to help defray the costs of this worthwhile event, monetary donations are needed. Other donations of gifts for prizes and raffle items will also be greatly appreciated. Call Linda Chastain at 383-3047 or Lisa Kupsc at 383-6826 for more information. All contributions can be sent to The Cohasset Post Prom Party, 72 Jerusalem Road., Cohasset 02025.

Holocaust survivor to speak at NDA

Notre Dame Academy in Hingham will be presenting a week-long awareness program, Respect for Difference, April 10 to 14.

The goal of the week is to foster, through knowledge, awareness and dialogue, an increased respect for the many differences that are experienced in the NDA, as well as the world community. The Student Support Team sponsors the program.

On April 10, Collette Howe '01 will present her original composition "World of Colors" accompanied by soloist Kathleen Szymczyk '01. The keynote speaker is Rena Finder, a Holocaust survivor and, at 13, she was the youngest person included on the now familiar "Schindler's List." Finder will describe what her life was like as a Polish Jew before, during and after World War II. There will be an opportunity to ask questions after her presentation.

During the week, each academic department will incorporate the topic of Respect for Difference into its curriculum. An essay contest is planned. The Multicultural Club will present a program dealing with stereotyping based on appearance. Each member of the NDA Community will be asked to develop a personal plan of action. The plans, based on what has been learned during the week, will identify specific ways to combat discrimination and to empower all of us to create change. The personal plans of action will be incorporated into the closing Liturgy that will be celebrated Friday, April 14.

Roy Campus Center inauguration is April 7

On Friday, April 7, Derby Academy Headmaster Edward R. Foley and board president Bruce H. Minevitz will cut the ribbon inaugurating the school's new 44,000 square foot, multi-purpose facility, the Roy Campus Center. The ceremony will occur at 7:30 p.m. in the new theater, Larson Hall.

Named for Peter and Leah Roy of Cohasset, "the building was designed to meet three critical needs of our long-range plan: a new expanded theater, more gym space and a larger, updated dining room," explained Foley. A 311-seat theater, Larson Hall, the gift of Donald and Mary Larson of Cohasset, has been designed to accommodate all areas of the performing arts with a state-of-the-art light- and sound-system. Handicapped accessible, the theater is also equipped to assist the hearing impaired.

Named for Robert and Kearin Lewis of Cohasset and George T. Lewis of North Carolina, the new Lewis Dining Hall seats 180 to 220 students, features an expanded kitchen, and uses round tables to retain the intimacy, emblematic of Derby's traditional family-style meals.

Across the front of the Center, the Brown Art Gallery, given by artists Marc and Laurie Brown of Hingham, connects the principal areas of the building and provides a highly visible display area for student work and guest artists.

McKelvey Gymnasium, named for William and Karin McKelvey of Norwell, adds badly-needed gym space to Derby's athletic program with the addition of two basketball courts. Four half-court practices or two full games can be held simultaneously increasing court time for all levels.

Other areas of the building include boys' and girls' locker rooms and theater dressing rooms, a woodshop, fitness room, music classroom, music practice rooms, and a drama/music classroom.

Architects Amsler Woodhouse & MacLean, Inc. of Boston designed the campus center. Contractors were Richard H. White & Sons of Auburndale.

Founded in 1784 by Hingham widow Sarah Derby, Derby Academy remains the oldest co-educational independent elementary school in New England. Derby is non-sectarian with 296 students (pre-K through 9th) representing 30 communities.

Larson Hall, the gift of Donald and Mary Larson of Cohasset, has been designed to accommodate all areas of the performing arts with a state-of-the-art light- and sound-system.

Fat City rocks The Sea Note on opening night. This is the 7th season for the Nantasket Beach nightclub.

Sea Note owners and husband/wife team Joe Phillips and Paula Dillon.

Hull club opens doors for season

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

The spring club season started on a good note at The Sea Note. The Nantasket Beach venue kicked off its 7th season to a packed house Friday. Headlining for the opening was the Fat City Band.

"It was the biggest opening we've ever had," said The Sea Note's co-owner Paula Dillon. "There was a line going out the door! During the course of the whole evening (April 1), there were probably 400 people who came through the door."

The Fat City opening is becoming an annual tradition at the Sea Note, Dillon said.

"It was a 'welcome back' kind of night," Dillon added. "People seemed to have some sort of fever because they haven't really gone out all season."

"It was packed," said Joe Phillips, Dillon's husband and co-owner of the club. "The people must have really missed us."

In spring, it has been said a young man's fancy turns to love — love of music in this case.

"Music is the main thing around here," Dillon added. "It's what ties our audience together."

Opening night went off without a hitch, but the owners of the Hull club said it took a long time to get to where they are now.

When the The Sea Note first opened in 1994, it was the product of a lot of hard work and determination dating back to when the duo met on the North Shore in the early 1980s.

"When (Phillips) and I met, he had just retired from the Coast Guard. At the time, I was working for the Department of Mental Health as a social worker," Dillon said. Their dream said Dillon, was to open a nightclub with a focus on presenting unique and eclectic forms of music.

"I eventually decided that I didn't want to do what I was doing for work," Dillon said of her social work job. "I always wanted to be in the music business, but I knew it was too late to be a rock star. I figured (Phillips) and I could go for the next best thing."

Dillon said she and Phillips started hunting around the North Shore for the perfect place to start a club, but their search for came up empty.

"That just didn't pan out," Dillon said. While the couple couldn't find a club spot, the did find love. The two married and moved to nearby Hingham. Five years

South Shore artists participate in juried Boston show

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Intricate sculptures. Fine oil paintings. Interesting scrap metal statues. All of these works of art can be seen in the on-going juried art show sponsored by Arts Around Boston Magazine.

The South Shore will be well represented in the exhibit which is on display through April 16 at the Charlestown Navy Yard's Preble Room Gallery. Cohasset artists JoAnne Chittick, Jeanne Replogle and Jack Nash, Marshfield's Dorit Flowers and Irena Roman of Scituate all have works in the show.

Barbara Mellin is the curator of this year's show, and she is also the editor and founding publisher of Arts Around Boston magazine. Mellin said all mediums are represented in the show which enjoys an unique exhibit location.

By working with the National Historic Park Service, Mellin was able to book the art show near the USS Constitution at the Charlestown Navy Yard's Preble Room Gallery.

"In the past, we've had this show in places like Lowell," Mellin said. "We're glad to be having it in the Boston area this year. We're hoping this kind of public venue (near the USS Constitution) will get us a lot of attention."

"It is our goal, that by moving the exhibit out of the more traditional arts venues to a very public place we will reach an even larger audience," said the magazine's director of promotions Jean Connolly.

Mellin said although this is the fourth time her magazine has sponsored an art show, this is only the second time the event has been held in Boston.

Mellin said it is a "big deal" to be able to have the show in Boston, as the main focus of her magazine is "to showcase the rich cultural resources that exist in Boston."

Mellin said the art work featured at the shows usually reflect a very diverse portfolio of different artists, and different forms of art as well, and this year's show is no exception.

The show is being "juried" by judges Andrew Kusmin and Flavia

Pasta Primavera

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

By Christopher Kimball
SPECIAL TO CNC

Pasta Primavera has its origins in the restaurant business and therefore its preparation is laborious and finicky, just the sort of thing to serve at New York's Le Cirque but hardly suitable for those of us who cook midweek dinners for four. Yet the notion of pasta paired with fresh vegetables is compelling, especially as warm weather approaches, so I set out to make Pasta Primavera light, fresh, and simple.

Although recipes for Pasta Primavera are hard to come by, I was struck by the sheer complexity of the preparation. Four or more pots are called for, a tomato sauce must be made, and a battalion of fresh vegetables must be individually prepared. The total time invested was well over two hours. In addition, this is no light meal – this dish has plenty of cream, which is necessary when one wishes to charge $20 a plate, but, to my palate, incongruous with the essential thrust of the recipe – fresh vegetables paired with pasta.

The first question was how to avoid preparing a tomato sauce. I tried fresh and canned tomatoes and finally settled on chopped ripe Roma (plum) tomatoes, adding them to the sauce, where they were heated through but not cooked. (I found that varieties other than plum tend to be too watery for this dish.) This not only contributed to the fresh, spring flavor but also eliminated the need to peel the tomatoes - since they do not actually cook, the skins did not separate into those red rolled-up bits. Note, however, that dull plum tomatoes with no aroma will add little to this dish and therefore I would opt to eliminate tomatoes altogether unless they are truly ripe and flavorful.

The next issue was which vegetables were worthy additions and which were mere baggage. Asparagus was a clear winner – it is quick to cook and flavorful. I tested broccoli, cauliflower, and red, yellow, and green and found that their taste and/or texture were not a good match with the other selections. Surprisingly, I found the same to be true of onions, green onions and leeks. I liked fava beans in the recipe but their preparation is exhausting (they must be shelled and steamed, and then each bean must be stripped of its tough outer skin) and their availability scarce. Green beans didn't add anything in texture or flavor. Carrots also seemed out of place - the texture more than the taste bothered me. I also tried the addition of pine nuts and, while the taste was nice, the nuts ended up at the bottom of the sauté pan. I tried toasting them and serving them as a garnish but this violated my oath of simplicity. After further testing, I settled on zucchini or summer squash, mushrooms, plum tomato, asparagus, and peas. To streamline the recipe, I cooked the first three ingredients in a sauté pan and the asparagus and peas right along with the pasta. To make this dish a success, however, it is crucial to have ripe, flavorful vegetables. Dull or bitter zucchini and large, woody asparagus aren't going to produce a light, tasty dinner. (I found the asparagus was best when only the first few inches from each stalk were used.) This dish derives all of its flavor from the vegetables plus a good dose of garlic which, by the way, also needs to be fresh and pungent. (Lots of stores sell old, flavorless garlic bulbs.) I eliminated the cream from this recipe since it seemed anathema to the notion of a garden-fresh dinner but to add a bit of additional flavor, I top each serving with thinly sliced basil and plenty of freshly ground Parmesan cheese. This is one dish where freshly ground black pepper is a serious ingredient, one that is key to success. Also pay attention to the salt level – taste a bit before serving and make adjustments accordingly.

I tried both fresh and dried pastas and preferred the latter. Fresh pasta is best with creamy sauces, which need to be absorbed and dried pasta is preferred for cleaner, simpler sauces. Either fettuccini or fusilli are good choices but shapes such as shells, ears, or tubes were less well suited to this recipe.

PASTA PRIMAVERA

This dish is about fresh, flavorful vegetables. If your ingredients are second-rate, don't bother with this dish since it has little else to fall back on for flavor. Check the salt level before serving and add plenty of freshly ground black pepper and freshly grated Parmesan before serving.

3 tablespoons best quality olive oil
3 tablespoons butter
3 cups zucchini or summer squash cut into 1/2 inch pieces (approximately 2 small or 1 medium)
3 cups medium sized white mushrooms 9 approximately 12 ounces), stemmed, wiped, and quartered
1 tablespoon finely minced garlic, approximately two medium cloves fi pound or three medium firm and ripe plum tomatoes cut into 1/2-inch pieces
1 teaspoon salt
1 pound dry pasta, fettuccini preferred
2 cups asparagus tips cut diagonally into 1-inch slices and using only the first three of four slices, approximately 1 1/2 pounds
1 cup fresh or frozen peas
1/3 cup thinly sliced fresh basil
Freshly ground black pepper
Freshly grated Parmesan Cheese

1. Set a large (at least 12 inches in diameter) sauté pan with a lid over medium heat. When hot add the oil and butter and when the butter stops foaming add the zucchini and mushrooms. Stir to coat with the oil/butter mixture and cover and cook for 5 minutes. Remove lid and add the garlic, stir, and cook uncovered for 1 minute longer. The zucchini and mushrooms will be softened some but not fully cooked. Add the tomatoes and salt, turn off the heat, and stir to combine. Allow to sit uncovered while the pasta and remaining vegetables are prepared. Meanwhile place a large pot of salted water to boil over high heat. 2. When the water is at a rolling boil add the pasta and cook according to manufacturer's al dente instructions. Five minutes before the pasta is finished cooking add the asparagus. Two minutes before the pasta is finished cooking add the peas. (The water will not stop boiling with either addition). Turn the burner containing the sauté pan to medium.

3. Drain the pasta (not vigorously) and empty the contents into the sauté pan. Using two large spoons or a pair of tongs gently combine the contents while sautéing for 2 minutes. Remove from the heat and stir in the basil. Serve immediately topped with freshly ground pepper and lots of freshly grated Parmesan cheese.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5

An inactive Aries moon warns you to cool your heels this morning. Don't get caught up in the whirlwind of activity. Think before you act. An applying alignment of Mars/Jupiter also impacts the day. Channel high energy constructively; tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Finish old business rather than starting new activities. At 3:29 p.m. the moon enters Taurus. Take time for inner reflection this evening; strive for greater spiritual vision.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6

This day has its ups and downs. Take it slow and easy this morning. The Taurus moon aligns with Jupiter, generating high energy and enthusiasm. Know your limits, however. Don't overdo, overreact. Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects. You can be most productive. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. A lunar alignment to Saturn is in effect between 4:50 and 7:50 p.m. and may bring a lull period. Meditate for inner peace.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7

At 4:24 a.m. the Taurus moon forms its last major contact to a planet and becomes inactive. This day is prime for vacationing. If you are working, do not initiate new activities until 5:58 p.m., when the moon enters Gemini. Instead, finish projects already begun, tie up loose ends, handle routine chores. A lunar alignment to Venus sets the stage for an exciting social evening. Put on your party hat and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8

The combination of a Gemini moon and applying sun/Uranus alignment makes this day ideal for fun and games. Be more spontaneous and adventurous. Visit or entertain friends. Spur of the moment ideas can be most successful. There is one rough spot in effect between 1:17 and 4:17 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Pluto occurs. Choose your words carefully. Don't do or say anything you will later regret. Keep it light.

SUNDAY, APRIL 9

A 60-degree alignment of the sun and Uranus prompts you to be more easygoing and lighthearted. Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities; treat yourself tq a day of leisure. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 12:01 p.m. until 8:16 p.m., when a Cancer moon takes over.

MONDAY, APRIL 10

A Cancer moon today and tomorrow places the focus on home and family matters. Influences are favorable for new starts of all kinds, particularly regarding purchase or sale of real estate. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive. The Cancer moon forms harmonious contacts to Jupiter at 3:34 p.m. and Mars at 7:33 p.m. Enjoy a special dinner with family and/or close to friends this evening.

TUESDAY, APRIL 11

The first quarter phase of the moon at 9:30 a.m. signals the buildup of the full moon which culminates next Tuesday, April 18. The Cancer moon continues active travel until 8:45 p.m., when it interacts with Mercury. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Neptune highlights all creative endeavors. Be more imaginative; follow your intuition. You can gain key insight and find new ways to express yourself. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life. The moon enters Leo at 11:16 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12

A lunar polarity to Neptune urges you to stay alert and use common sense this morning. People may be feeling tired and can be careless, forgetful, easily distracted. On the other hand, this day is ideal for vacationing. Be sure to take extra time out to pursue favorite sports, hobbies, social activities. The moon travels in playful Leo all day. Mercury moves into Aries at 8:17 p.m., remaining there until April 29.

New study debunks myths about property taxes in Massachusetts

Boston: The Trust for Public Land, a national nonprofit organization, announced the release of its new report, Community Choices: Thinking Through Land Conservation, Development, and Property Taxes in Massachusetts.

The report disproves the long-accepted myth that new residential development makes towns financially stronger by bringing in more local property tax revenues. In fact, the study finds that in many cases new residential development results in a net revenue loss for towns because the additional property taxes don't fully cover new municipal services costs.

The report disproves the long-accepted myth that new residential development makes towns financially stronger by bringing in more local property tax revenues. In fact, the study finds that in many cases new residential development results in a net revenue loss for towns because the additional property taxes don't fully cover new municipal services costs.

Whitney Hatch, vice president and regional director of the Trust for Public Land, explained, "The Massachusetts landscape is undergoing an intensive transformation. As development pressures mount on farms, forests, and other open space, communities are struggling to control their growth and find a balance between development and land conservation. Community Choices is designed to give municipal officials and boards the information they need to make sound decisions about their land."

"The Trust for Public Land's Community Choices report is an excellent example of the type of information Massachusetts residents need to make critical choices about our future."
Bob Durand, Secretary of Environmental Affairs

"The Trust for Public Land's Community Choices report is an excellent example of the type of information Massachusetts residents need to make critical choices about our future," said Bob Durand, Secretary of Environmental Affairs.

"We must act now to preserve what is special about our communities, or we will lose our unique character forever. If we lose that, we lose the quality of life that makes Massachusetts such a great place to live, work, and raise a family. The same booming economy that puts pressure on us to develop our open spaces, also provides us with an opportunity to reinvest near existing infrastructures, furthering community preservation."

"Whenever a town proposes a land conservation project, questions invariably arise about how the purchase will affect the municipal bottom line," commented Sally Zielinski, executive director of the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions.

"This report will go a long way toward clarifying the relationship between how land is used, what property taxes are generated from that use, and what towns pay to provide services like fire and police protection and public schools."

The report concludes that:

• In general, Massachusetts communities with the most residential development have the highest property tax rates.

•Towns with the highest residential property tax rates do not spend the most per pupil on education.

• Land conservation can help control property taxes by guiding growth and limiting the need for expanded municipal services.

Community Choices was written for the Trust for Public Land by economist Deb Brighton and was first released in 1998. The publication of this newly revised version was made possible by generous gifts from the Cricket, Orchard and Sudbury Foundations and from individual supporters.

The Trust for Public Land was founded in 1972 to protect land for people to enjoy as parks and open space. Since then, it has protected more than one million acres of land nationwide. To order a copy of Community Choices, call Elizabeth Bromberg at (617) 367-6200 Ext. 316 or via email at elizabeth.bromber@tpl.org. LEGAL BRIEF

Follow the directions! Obey the rules! When used properly, machines can serve as our slaves, but, ignore those directions, and those very same machines will become our masters.

Our State Supreme Judicial Court reviewed a case concerning claims, for injuries caused by a collapse of construction scaffolding. Seven justices sat on the matter of Glidden v. Maglio which was reported in a decision dated Feb.2, 2000.

Background

1. Nicholas Maglio (Defendant, Maglio) owned and lived in a three-family house in Beverly.

2. When Maglio discovered that his tenant Gary Glidden was a roofer, he hired Gary to perform some needed roof repair. Gary hired his brother, Brian and John Strong as helpers.

3. Maglio agreed that he would apply for and obtain a building permit for the work to be performed.

4. Because ladders in the driveway would interfere with Maglio's vehicular access, Gary suggested using "pump-Jack scaffolding" to gain access to the roof.

Scaffolding was the perfect solution to the access problem and everything would have worked out, except for one thing. The scaffolding was not secured properly and collapsed injuring Brian and Strong.

Well, brothers don't generally sue brothers, so Brian sued Maglio claiming that (1) Maglio breached a duty of care as the owner of a construction site; (2) Maglio breached his duty as a general contractor; (3) Maglio failed to warn of a dangerous condition.

Discussion

In this case, Gary supplied all the labor, materials and equipment including the materials to erect the "pump-Jack scaffolding." Maglio had no involvement in the scaffolding setup or selection of materials. Maglio never undertook to supervise or direct the work. Brian introduced no evidence as to why the scaffolding collapsed. Failing in this essential part of his burden if proof, there was a missing link in the casual chain connecting Maglio to the accident.

Decision

A homeowner may very well be liable for injuries occurring during home repair; however, liability won't attach without establishing that: (1) The homeowner breached a duty of care; (2) The breach was negligent; (3) The plaintiff was injured as a result of the breach. Since Brian never proved what caused the collapse, he missed an essential element of his case. The Court found Maglio free of negligence.

Legal Advice

Homeowners check your insurance, especially liability coverage. You might consider personal umbrella coverage. Before your contractor starts the job — get a copy of his/her insurance coverage. And, above all, check your scaffolding.

Meticulously restored treasure

This gorgeous home was built ca.1683 and finished in 1700; the addition was built in 1995 (timber frame). Part of the original Miles Standish Grant, it was owned by Peter Salmond and has been a post office, general store and cobblers shop.

The home has been meticulously restored with six working fireplaces, exposed beams and wide pine flooring. Extraordinary raised paneled woodwork surrounds the fireplace in the living room. The gourmet kitchen includes a bee hive oven in the fireplace, custom-made cherry cabinets, a Glenwood stove in working condition and beautiful tile, skylights and glass doors to a patio.

The family room boasts breathtaking post and beam construction with lavish use of skylights and windows and double glass doors. The adjoining sunroom connected by another set of glass doors offers marble floor and antique stained glass window.

There are three full baths, one with a Jacuzzi tub and one with an old-fashioned claw-foot tub.

The attic has been rough plumbed and is wired and ready to expand or leave and continue to use as ample storage space.

Bordering conservation land to the rear and abutting the herring run on one side, the property includes 4.15 acres (3 acres fenced) of beautiful meadow with 27 different types of fruit trees, various berries and assorted nut trees. A .75-acre pond, which is spring fed, is constantly self cleaning with run off to the back of the property.

Ideal for someone with horses, a gardener, gentleman farmer or hobby farmer, this delightful property has access to the town park with its riding trails off to the rear of the property.

IN BRIEF

Rep. O'Brien announces availability of consumer information

State Rep. Thomas O'Brien (D-Kingston) announced the availability of copies of "A Consumer's Guide to the Licensed Professionals Within the Division of Registration" and "Facts for Consumers" information packets. These guides and fact sheets contain information for consumers concerning professional and occupational licensing for more than 530,000 individuals in more than 48 trades and professions, ranging from nurses to electricians to pharmacists.

"There is simply no substitute for an informed consumer," said O'Brien.

The consumer guide provides consumers with a great deal of information on licensed professionals in the Commonwealth, including things to look for when hiring a professional and when and how to file a complaint against a licensed professional. There are currently 26 fact sheets available covering a wide array of consumer oriented topics, which give consumers concise information on professional licensing in specific trades or professions.

A big misperception is that only large corporate construction companies are capable of engaging in illegal, or unethical behavior resulting in criminal prosecution or fine by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration ("OSHA"). Sometimes it's the single local professional who evades acceptable community standards for personal service," added O'Brien.

"This is a good way to find out who is reputable in your community." For the most part, the professionals who are insured, practice in licensed trades, and/or belong to a trade association tend to be more accountable for their work," said O'Brien.

To get a copy of a consumer guide or a specific fact sheet, residents are urged to call O'Brien's office at 617-722-2060.

Caring for trees and shrubs in spring

Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Spring fever is in full swing as the beauty of the April landscape unfolds. The cold temperatures of January and the brisk, desiccating winds of February appear to have had little negative impact on our favorite early-bloomers as a parade of colorful flowers brightens the emerging landscape.

A dazzling profusion of starry yellow forsythia blossoms creates lemon-colored clouds in almost every yard. The delicate, rosy-purple flowers of the Korean Rhododendron (R. mucronulatum) and the soft pink blossoms of a selected variety of this deciduous rhododendron, 'Cornell Pink,' though fleeting and susceptible to frosty evenings, are a welcome sign of spring. Fuzzy, gray buds on the tips of star magnolias have swelled and split open to reveal glistening, snow-white blossoms.

A dazzling profusion of starry yellow forsythia blossoms creates lemon-colored clouds in almost every yard.

Spring is the ideal time to transplant many trees and shrubs. It is best to transplant deciduous trees and shrubs before the leaves appear. Soft-barked trees, such as magnolias, cherries, birches and dogwoods should only be moved in spring. Broad-leafed evergreens, including rhododendrons, mountain laurels and andromedas, are also best transplanted at this time of year. Forsythia can be uprooted while flowering, but should be relocated before the leaves appear. Other trees and shrubs can be moved in spring or fall.

Begin by preparing your new hole before digging up the plant to be transferred. The depth of the hole should be deep enough to enable you to reset the tree or shrub at the same level as it was previously growing. The width of your hole should be two to three times the diameter of the root ball of the plant to be positioned in it. Add superphosphate and moistened peat moss or compost to the soil taken from the hole. Avoid planting in heavy, wet soils. Many tree and shrub failures are the result of planting in poorly drained soils or due to planting too deeply. It is better to plant a little too shallow and apply a layer of mulch to cover the top of the root ball.

Once you have prepared your hole, you can begin the process of transplanting. For trees, it is important to create a root ball large enough to support the upper growth and a general rule is to allow one foot of root ball for each inch of diameter of the tree's trunk.

For example, a tree having a trunk one inch in diameter would require a root ball one foot across, or 6 inches from the base of the trunk all the way around.

Use a spade initially to slice the roots by cutting straight down. Then use a shovel to remove the soil beyond the perimeter of these roots and finally, dig beneath to gradually produce a well-rounded ball. Before lifting the plant out of the hole, it is wise to wrap the root ball with burlap to keep the soil intact around the roots and then tie it in place. Before placing a large tree or shrub in the hole, determine its best side and position it accordingly before lowering it into the hole. If possible, reposition a transplanted tree or shrub facing the same exposure as it was previously growing by marking the plant prior to digging with a piece of twine.

After placing the tree or shrub in the hole, backfill with your amended soil halfway and water thoroughly. Allow the water to settle and then finish filling the hole. Firm the soil around the plant. Create a moat of mounded soil to keep water contained and leave a hose trickling at its base until the ground is thoroughly wet. Trees and shrubs need a slow, deep watering to reach all roots. Add a layer of mulch over the area to reduce evaporation and prevent weeds, but avoid allowing the mulch to touch the bark as this may lead to diseases or insect infestations.

Mid-February to mid-April is an ideal time to prune many trees and shrubs as the framework of the plant is more evident, although it should be noted that pruning at this time of year may result in the removal of a current season's flowers. Always prune damaged or diseased limbs as soon as they are noticed. Should you observe crossed branches, lop off at least one of the branches, as the constant rubbing of one against the other may lead to disease. Nearly all shrubs and trees benefit from routine pruning to train, develop, revitalize or retrain overgrown plants to keep them in scale with their surroundings. Good pruning techniques also improve the health of most plants by promoting air circulation and allowing light to reach the interior of an otherwise densely branched tree or shrub.

Summer and fall blooming trees and shrubs such as butterfly bushes (Buddleia), blue mist shrub (Caryopteris), sweet pepper bush (Clethra) and Rose-of-Sharon should be pruned before new growth appears. Even very large butterfly bushes should be cut back to 12 to 18 inches tall. This drastic pruning will promote glorious quantities of fragrant blooms later in the summer. Severely prune the old, woody canes of the red- and yellow-twigged dogwoods and Hydrangea 'Annabelle' early in the season.

All trees and shrubs will benefit from a spring application of fertilizer. Broadcast MNLA Plant-O-Ganic, 8-8-8, Hollytone, or a comparable fertilizer around the base of established trees and shrubs.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Here On Earth (C)

Does the moviegoing public need another incarnation of "Love Story"? Or, for that matter, does America need another teenage angst tale culminating sadly and poignantly but with wiser and better people emerging from the depths of despair? Tough questions, there, and unanswerable since, like clockwork, Hollywood churns out scads of these items and periodically this column takes a look at one or more, just to see where we are in the cliche department. "Here on Earth" will do as much as "Whatever it Takes," or any of several other such examples of the genre.

This movie plays out according to the dictates of one of movieland's favorite themes: the conflict between young adorables of different classes, culminating in a breakthrough into understanding and love. "Here on Earth" isn't quite "Romeo and Juliet" but it has the spirit of unlikely romance to give it zip. The featured characters here are a spoiled preppie, handsome Kelley (Chris Klein); a beatifically lovely local girl, Samantha (Leelee Sobieski); and her longtime friend who wants to be her boyfriend and thinks he's entitled, studly, sturdy, Jasper (Josh Hartnett). Early on, Kelley receives a Mercedes convertible from his father, as compensation for being unable to attend the boy's graduation ceremony, and with his pals he tools from prep school into town and soon engages in a devil-may-care car chase and competition with Jasper and his homeys. This culminates in the two boys crashing into the local cafe, Mable's Table (where Samantha works) and destroying it.

Now how to get Kelley to hang around town so that romance can blossom? Easy: The boys are brought to trial, and since this is Hollywood's version of diversity, that contemporary favorite of the industry, the black woman judge, is brought in to sort things out and does so by sentencing Kelley and Jasper to a summer of rebuilding Mable's Table. Kelley had been planning on a carefree summer following prep school before matriculating at Princeton, but now that is ruined and he and his rival, snorting at each other like angry bulls, must join forces to do the construction job. Samantha gets one long, lingering look at Kelley with his shirt off and comes to yearn for him big time. Big surprise. The budding romance is tender and poetic as the rich boy finds true love with the unrich girl and she, against the code of her class and pained implorings from Jasper, finds true love with him.

Rich Chris Klein is ready to cross to the poor side of town for the love of Leelee Sobieski.

Other handy ingredients tossed in include Kelley's father, the rich guy, interrupting a little weekend interlude at the family mansion outside Boston and sternly telling his son that he must give up this futile thing and return to his construction work sentence and prepare himself for college. What would the movies do without stern fathers? And, giving not too much away here, tragedy strikes. The movie is pretty to look at, always nice in love stories, a bit ridiculous to listen to and certifiably cookie cutter cute.

The Skulls (C-)

What could be more fun than penetrating the forbidding, forbidden walls of the major secret society at Yale and spilling out its secrets? Skull and Bones is renowned, ancient, mysterious and allegedly the emotional home of a couple of U.S. presidents and of the current Republican presidential candidate. No membership list is published but members are instructed to walk out of the room if somebody mentions the group. (In 1988 I urged Governor Michael Dukakis, the Democratic presidential nominee, to say "Skull and Bones" every time he crossed George Bush's path, since the then vice president and Republican presidential candidate would then have to scurry away. Dukakis didn't listen to me. He lost.)

"The Skulls" starts out with the right idea and then turns the whole thing into lurid, preposterous melodrama. We first meet our hero, a townie who's made it into an unidentified college whose initial letter is Y and whose rowing team is known as the Bulldogs - believe me, this is supposed to be Yale - as he and friends row their way to victory against Harvard and others. He is Luke McNamara (Joshua Jackson, who plays Pacey on "Dawson's Creek"), and he and a dozen others, including devastatingly handsome rich boy Caleb Mandrake (Paul Walker), are tapped to join the Skulls and put to an awesome test.

Our two quickly budding novice Skulls pass the test and then move on to not only enter the sacred confines of the society but to learn soon enough that its power is awesome. Example: Midway through this unfortunate film, Luke is handed an envelope containing early acceptance to any law school of his choice, though he hasn't yet applied to any law school at all. Example: Each guy is given a gorgeous, terrific automobile. Example: The society includes among its senior members a southern senator (William Petersen) and Caleb Mandrake's father, Litten (Craig T. Nelson), plus the college's provost (Christopher McDonald) plus, we're to believe, half or more of the most powerful men in America.

Here the melodrama begins. Luke's roommate (Hill Harper), who tells Luke that if it's elite and secret it can't be any good, snoops around for the school newspaper, this at his mortal peril, and a cover-up of monumental proportions is arranged by the senior members of the society. The local cop (Steve Harris of "The Practice") is suspicious and proves this by narrowing his eyes, when he's not popping them. Luke's friend Chloe (Leslie Bibb)is on hand to help Luke out, as are his pre-college buddies, who magically appear at a time of need. The movie veers so badly off course that every dramatic encounter entails the unbelievably convenient appearance of either good guys or villains, until the whole thing spins horribly out of control. Whatever really goes on in a Yale secret society remains still unknown, in part thanks to the stupid way in which this always energetic, tepidly acted, but scenic film forgets what it set out to do.

Cigliano and various prizes are up for grabs including getting featured on the cover of the Arts Around Boston magazine.

"We picked 70 different pieces of art to be in the show," Mellin added, "out of about 400 entries. We have a committee that picks all the work to be featured. There was quite a wide range to pick from this year."

While artists from around the state are showing works, Mellin said there is something special about the South Shore that brings great artists and great art.

"I'm always happy when I get picked to do a show," Roman said. "You're never guaranteed a spot in a show, no matter how good you are, so it's definitely a good thing. Going to a show like this opens up your senses," she said. "It helps people see the world around them through a different pair of eyes. A show like this transports you."

Roman said her art work mainly includes water-color scenes from Duxbury and Scituate.

"I also work in graphite pencil sometimes," Roman said, adding she has "tried just about every art form there is."

Nash, who is also being featured at the show, is a general contractor who discovered his artistic flair through woodworking, a Nash said he will be showcasing one of his sculptures at the event.

"I'm into abstract design," Nash said, noting his work represents different themes and various feelings. "I think originality is what really makes a good work of art. And art shows like this give people a chance to see something unusual that they wouldn't see on a day-to-day basis."

"That's what I think makes this show unique," Mellin agreed. "There's such a variety here, such a wide range of subject matter. There isn't one particular theme dominating this show. A typical art show will often choose their works based on a particular theme or showcase the work of just one artist. I think the way we're doing it makes it very exciting, and very attractive to the viewer."

She said people who have never been to an art show should not feel bashful about going to this one.

"You have to just walk around and take it all in," she said. "You have to trust your instincts and not be intimated by the art. You just have to enjoy it. There's no right or wrong in all of this."

Attending the Rose Parade

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. My wife and I are considering a trip to Pasadena, Calif., and the Rose Parade next January. Do you have any suggestions for a package tour, and can you tell us how much it would cost?

A. The Tournament of Roses Association offers a package every year to the Rose Bowl Game and the Rose Parade. The prices for the 2001 package will be out in May, but shouldn't be too different from this year's prices.

You can purchase the package to attend both the game and parade, or just the parade. The land-only package for the parade starts at $950 per person, double occupancy, and includes four nights' accommodations (Dec. 30 to Jan. 3), daily buffet breakfast, motor coach transfers to all events, grandstand seating for the parade, VIP luncheon after the parade, and viewing of the floats before and after the parade.

If you're traveling from outside the Los Angeles area, you need to purchase your own airfare to either Los Angeles, Burbank or Ontario separately.

For more information, call (626) 449-9550, or visit www.rosebowl.com.

Q. I recently bought a ticket to London from an online travel agency and was surprised by all the extra fees, surcharges, and taxes, imposed both by the airline itself and the agency.

In addition to the federal tax, which was included in the quoted fare, there were passenger facility charges, fuel surcharges ($20), departure and inspection fees; the travel agency also charged a ticket delivery fee, $10 more if I wanted a real "paper" ticket rather than an electronic one, and when I asked if I could change the date of my return after ticketing, they said I'd have to pay a $300 change fee.

Since the ticket, before all these taxes and things, cost just $350, I couldn't believe it and stuck to my original date. You should warn your readers about all these hidden extras.

A. These extra charges, as you've discovered, can sometimes cost more than the original ticket. Especially when booking online, you should ask about hidden fees (sometimes they don't appear until after you've typed in your credit card number and bought the ticket, which is clearly unfair).

If there's a help desk phone number, call it before you commit; if not, search the site carefully to see if there's full disclosure (if there isn't, you might want to find a site that's more forthright). Especially ask what it costs to make a change to your ticket after you've booked (some online agencies charge double what the airlines themselves do).

Q. We're looking for an unlimited golf package for a few nights next autumn, preferably in the Caribbean. Can you point us to a decent deal?

A. The Wyndham El Conquistador Resort in Puerto Rico offers a three-night package with unlimited golf on its 18-hole championship course for $735 per night, per person, based on double occupancy, until Dec. 19, 2000. Also included in this "Best of El Conquistador" package: daily breakfast and dinner, airport transfers and an ocean-view room.

For reservations and more information, call your travel agent or (800) WYNDHAM.

Q. I had a reservation at a New York City hotel last month that I guaranteed with my credit card, but when I showed up around 8 p.m., after having called ahead to say I'd be arriving at that time, they announced that there was no room for me. I told them I'd be happy with a rollaway bed in a conference room, but no deal. They did offer to find me a room at a nearby hotel, which they paid for, but it wasn't as good.

Am I entitled by law for further compensation, and had I not guaranteed the room with a major credit card, would I still be entitled to any compensation?

A. Most good hotels will offer to find you a suitable room elsewhere, pay for a taxi to that hotel, and even give you a free night at their hotel next time there's room. There's no law that requires this, although if you guarantee your room with a major credit card, the hotel is often required by the company to provide most of these perks.

But there really is no guarantee, no matter what card you use, that you'll get a room at the hotel you've booked if there's an oversold situation.

Sea Note a shore bet

after they began their search. Phillips and Dillon hit pay dirt in Hull.

"We saw the place on the beach," Dillon said, "and we said 'let's do it.' It was a pretty happy moment for both of us after all that searching and a great deal of discouragement. It was a process. But the rest is history."

Phillips and Dillon both knew they did not want to open a bar, that is, they did not want people to come to their club with the sole purpose of having a few drinks. What they wanted was to treat the people of the South Shore with some innovative, hard-driving music.

And their policy has not changed since day one. Phillips and Dillon said many of the bands who play at the club are blues-oriented, but they also noted a number of jazz and New-Orleans style Zydeco bands play at the club as well. In addition, the club often presents all ages shows on Sundays where the styles of music range from rock to punk.

The Sea Note opened to a packed house Friday.

Considering they spend all their time together, personally and professionally, Phillips and Dillon make a very good team.

"It's got its advantages and disadvantages," Dillon said. "We're very honest with each other, but we knock heads sometimes. It's hard to imagine not doing this with (Phillips)."

"I'm the mechanic," Phillips said. "I keep the systems going and maintain the tools the staff need to get the job done. (Dillon) is 99 percent responsible for the way the club looks. But the overall theme is that everyone who works here are huge music lovers. Our common bond is our love for music."

"The good thing is that (Phillips) and I have similar tastes in what we think is good musically," Dillon added. "We don't usually disagree on the basics."

Dillon said some of her favorite live shows she has seen include those of Jethro Tull, Bruce Springsteen, and Warren Zevon.

While they haven't booked Springsteen yet, The Sea Note often hosts acts like The Love Dogs, a high energy blues band, and guitar stars like Jeff Pitchell. She said both local and national music acts are often featured at the club.

"The whole idea behind founding the club was starting a place that we would go to ourselves," Dillon said. "We always have really good, really different music here, and the atmosphere is not at all pretentious."

Dillon said sometimes people will not be familiar with the bands playing at The Sea Note, but she said that is exactly the point. One of The Sea Note's goals is to give people a different perspective on different kinds of music and to keep things fresh.

"I think the bands we book make us unique," Dillon said. "I think a lot of places book bands on the terms of what will fill up a room, but what we book, we actually like. It's risky, but we feel we have to keep trying new things. You're not going to hear a bad band in our club."

There's no need to travel to Boston for night life, notes Dillon.

"Here, you can see Boston-level entertainment without the muscled door men holding walkie-talkies and without the attitude. And it's right here in your back yard."

For more information on The Sea Note call (781) 925-4300 or log onto their website at www.seanote.com.

Big vote for the schools

Michael H. Sullivan wins selectman's race

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A festive atmosphere surrounded Town Hall on Saturday as nearly one-half of the town's registered voters turned out for this year's annual town election. Candidates for state representative and state senator waived to voters, while the MS Walk traipsed through town. A wedding at one of the churches on the common added to the smiles which were seen on the sun-drenched spring day.

In the end, no one was happier Saturday than members of the school committee and school facilities committee, who celebrated the passage of a $41.8 million debt-exclusion override of Proposition 2 1/2 to fund the renovations of Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle-High School.

The vote on the school project brought resident to the polls in force. According to Town Clerk Marion Douglas, 49.5 percent of the town's 5,227 registered voters cast ballots on Saturday.

More than 63 percent of the 2,424 voters who answered the override question voted in favor of the $41.8 million figure, which will represent a cost to Cohasset taxpayers of $16.7 million after state reimbursement of 60 percent. School facilities chairman Robert Spofford said he was overjoyed by the result.

"Between the schools and the library, it seems people are on the same page about where we want to go as a community."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"It was a great day," Spofford said. "I'm happy that it was not a close vote. The vote on the new Osgood school was very divisive

Marathon mom to tackle Boston

Balances training with six children

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In the days leading up to next Monday's Boston Marathon, television reports and newspaper articles will undoubtedly focus upon the training regimens of the favorites in the race. Some may train at altitude to improve their endurance while others may run some of the world's most hilly terrain in an effort to conquer the indomitable "Heartbreak Hill."

But how many of them have six kids?

"After I finished the marathon, my kids said 'How could you run for so long?'"
— 2000 Boston Marathon entrant Mary Ernst

For Cohasset resident Mary Ernst, who is in training for her second Boston Marathon, finding the time to log the hundreds of miles necessary for her race preparation is a tad more difficult than it is for most marathoners.

Ernst and her husband, Robert, have six kids between the ages of four and 16, leaving precious little spare time to put in her miles.

Robert said the family makes a conscious effort to make time for mom's training.

"For her to be able to do a good job in the marathon, she needs to be able to put in a lot of time," he said. "She makes out her workout schedule ahead of time and we make sure we plan accordingly, so I can watch the kids or do whatever needs to be done when it's time for her runs."

Mary said her family has been wonderful in adapting to her running schedule and the time demands which come with training for a marathon.

"The kids have all been very supportive and my husband is so good," she said. "You do have to stick to a schedule, though, because the kids need you. I can't

Lobster Lab and Maritime Institute discuss merger

Would use both Hagerty buildings

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Two non-profit educational organizations in town may merge in an attempt to better share resources in their common goal of teaching students about coastal environments.

Both the Cohasset Maritime Institute and the Cohasset Lobster Lab occupy buildings on or near the Hagerty Property, located on the ocean at the end of Parker Avenue. The Maritime Institute occupies the boathouse at the location, while the Lobster Lab rents the dilapidated former home of Cohasset Colonials. Both lease the buildings from the town for $1 per year.

The Lobster Lab focuses upon the study of lobsters for genetic research by students. It also helped coordinate a project last summer in which 40 Cohasset High School students monitored water quality at Little Harbor. The Maritime Institute held courses last summer to teach students maritime skills such as boating, oceanography, and microbiology.

A meeting has been scheduled for April 26 to discuss the possibility of merging the two groups. The meeting is to held at Pavoris, the company run by Lobster Lab president Kevin Ulmer.

According to a draft proposal, the two groups would be combined to establish the Center for Suburban Coastal Studies. While the organizations currently have distinct functions, Ulmer said the two have similar goals and could work well

Abington Savings is robbed at gunpoint

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Abington Savings Bank in Shaw's was robbed at gunpoint Friday evening.

A lone white male, who was caught on video tape, laid a silver, semi-automatic handgun on the counter at about 7:45 p.m. and told the teller he wanted hundreds and fifties, Det. Rick Grassie said.

This is the second bank robbery at that supermarket branch in recent months. The same bank was robbed on Dec. 28 by a unarmed man wearing a ski mask, who presented a note to the teller on duty.

Grassie said he thinks the two robberies could be related.

"The two were similar," Grassie said. "In both cases a stolen car was used that was recovered sometime after the incident."

This time the perpetrators stole a four-door, 1993 red Oldsmobile Cutlass from the MBTA lot in Needham. In the Dec. 28 robbery, the vehicle involved – a red, 1995 Jeep Cherokee – was stolen from a resident in Woburn. Both cars were later discovered abandoned in parking lots at other Rt. 3A plazas in town.

"Fortunately no one walked in at that time to do any bank business."
— Det. Rick Grassie

"I do believe that more than one person is involved," Grassie said. "When the car is dropped down the street, it is obvious that there is a second car sitting and waiting."

Grassie said the teller described the man as about 5 ft. 2 in. tall and 150 pounds. He had have a "scraggly thin moustache." He was wearing a blue Red Sox hat, a dark zip-up jacket, dark shirt and pants.

According to Grassie the teller had trouble opening her cash drawer which prompted the bank robber to threaten her.

Board reorganizes

The board of selectmen reorganized Tuesday electing Tom Callahan as chairman and Fred Koed as vice chairman.

After a two-year hiatus, selectman Michael H. Sullivan is back on the board. Sullivan, who did not seek reelection in 1998 after serving two terms, won a three-way race for the seat vacated by Diane Sullivan, who is moving out of town.

"I hope to please as many people as possible in the next three years," Sullivan said, adding that he hoped townspeople would feel free to approach him with concerns and issues.

Water tank event

Selectman Fred Koed will represent the board of selectmen at the groundbreaking for the new water tank on Scituate Hill at 9 a.m. on Monday. Koed is a former water commissioner.

Train committee

Selectmen unanimously agreed to appoint Peter Guild, 119 N. Main St., to the Greenbush Mitigation Committee, chaired by Tom Gruber.

"Thank you, Peter," selectman Ronnie McMorris said.

Selectmen are still seeking three other citizens to serve on the committee that is negotiating with the MBTA about mitigation for the train. Interested residents should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Library week

Selectmen proclaimed April 9-15 as National Library Week in Cohasset. Chairman Tom Callahan read the proclamation that recognized the vital role that libraries and librarians play in the community.

Building committee

Town Manager Mark Haddad explained that because the $41.8 million school override passed, the school facilities committee has now become the school building committee. The school building committee met for the first time at the high school library last night. Preliminary plans are to put the project out to bid in the fall and start construction next March. The impact of the override won't show up on real estate tax bills until fiscal year 2002, Haddad said.

Architect hired

Lynnfield-based Allen M. Lieb Architects was hired to conduct the feasibility study on the future of the police/fire stations.

That's the same firm that was involved with the Hingham Town Hall project, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Town meeting appropriated $15,000 for the study.

In the meantime, Haddad said he has been approached by private organizations interested in renting the back section of the old Osgood School that could be considered for use as the new police station. The front part of Osgood will house the new town library.

He said the goal is to have an idea by the end of the summer on what the options are for the police/fire station and to take them to the fall special town meeting.

ConCom members

Selectman Merle Brown said the conservation commission needs associate members. A full member will step down in June and the commission needs to get someone on board as an associate now who can become a full member in a few months, he said. Anyone interested should call the selectman's office at 383-4105 or contact a conservation commissioner.

Trash program

The Pay-As-You-Throw (or buck-a-bag) trash disposal program adopted at town meeting will be enacted in fiscal year 2002, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. The recycling committee has agreed to that time frame to allow time for an education process. It will also allow time to adjust the budget that is already set for fiscal year 2001, which starts July 1.

Open Space survey

A survey from the Open Space Committee has been included in this quarter's tax bills.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee, urges residents to take the time to fill out the questionnaire because the results will help the Open Space Committee define open space and recreation priorities during the next five years.

"Every five years the state mandates that towns file an open space and recreation plan. Our plan expires in June 2001, and the Open Space Committee is in the process of updating it. If we don't have an active plan, we won't be eligible for many state grant and loan programs," she said.

Forms are available in the town hall and library, and surveys may be left in the drop boxes at both locations.

The Open Space Committee is also looking for one new member. Anyone interested should call Cook at 383-6313.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, April 25.

School committee to take a closer look at transportation

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With the school renovation project now approved, school committee members can now take a break from the project and focus on improvements to some of the school district's other pressing areas of concern.

One of those areas is transportation, especially relating to trips to athletic events and other extracurricular activities. Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said the current state of transportation to such events is abysmal.

"I can't overemphasize to you what a mess the busing situation is," Collins told the school committee last Thursday. "We have four drivers and four school buses, and right now we've got one driver and one bus out of commission. It just isn't being done professionally. It's like a mom-and-pop operation."

Because of the problems in the school district's transportation department, Collins said outside contractors are being relied upon and paid through the athletic department's revolving fund.

"We're virtually funding all our athletic activities outside the transportation budget," Collins said. "We have some drivers who don't want to go over the Fore River Bridge and some who don't want to go to New Bedford. We're not going to allow kids to drive all over creation because we can't expose people to the liability. We've had to cancel some things and that's crazy."

The proposed school department transportation budget for the 2001-2002 school year is approximately $176,000, which includes salaries, leases, fuel, maintenance, and benefits.

To look at an alternative method of running the school's transportation department, superintendent Edward Malvey solicited bids from outside contractors to operate the service.

Malvey said he received only two bids to run the school's transportation department, the lowest of which came in just under $215,000. Malvey said the lowest bid was $38,000 more than what the school district currently spends on transportation, making the use of an outside contractor cost prohibitive.

"I can't overemphasize to you what a mess the busing situation is. It just isn't being done professionally. It's like a mom-and-pop operation."
— Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins

Because the school department has been forced to use outside contractors for athletic transportation and funded such expenditures from the athletic department's revolving fund, school committee member Stephanie Noble said the $38,000 difference was inaccurate.

"Are we comparing apples to apples?" Noble asked. "I'd like to know how much we spend on athletic transportation because that number should be added to our budget when making the comparison with the bids from outside contractors."

Malvey said the athletic department spends approximately $23,000 for contracted transportation, which would still make the lowest bid received $15,000 greater than the school department's total transportation expenditures. He said he was not inclined to make the switch to an outside contractor for an additional cost of at least $15,000.

"The $15,000 figure is only as good as today," Malvey said. "If I had $15,000 right now, I'd rather do something internal. I was hoping against hope the numbers would come out better, but it wasn't the case."

Noble said the problems with school transportation may be indicative of inadequate spending. She said it would make sense to reexamine the bids received from outside contractors.

"Can we do a better job with the amount of money in our budget?" she asked. "I don't know that we're that far off. I'd like to take a look at the numbers a little more closely."

Collins said a major problem with school transportation involves smaller teams or groups who are taken by large buses to events at an unnecessary cost.

"We're spending an enormous amount of money on outside contractors to drive eight golfers or a debate team," Collins said. "You're going to have to bite the bullet someday and look at buying a 15-seat van for a coach or a teacher to drive."

School committee chairman said the committee will definitely explore further the possibility of hiring an outside contractor to operate the school transportation department.

"I think the school committee and superintendent are all on the same page and would really like to see it happen," DeGiacomo said. "Something has to give."

Unobstructed view over Gammons Point preserved

Land court sides with abutters in case

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The ocean view looking over Gammons Point is unobstructed, and it's going to remain that way, according to the Norfolk County Land Court.

Justice Leon J. Lombardi has upheld the validity of a deed restriction prohibiting for 999 years most development on a Gammons Point parcel known as Lot O. Lombardi declared that the restriction is really an easement preserving the view over the Point.

The easement, attached to the deed in 1923, prohibits the construction of any structure on the 3/4-acre parcel except for necessary breakwaters, open wire fences no more than six-feet-high, and walls no more than three-feet-high. Trees, shrubs and other obstructions are also prohibited.

The original owner of the property, Charles Gammons, placed the easement on the property deed for Lot O and other nearby parcels he owned to preserve the natural beauty of the land and the ocean view. Since 1923, Gammons' heirs have sold some of the parcels at the Point, but the deed easement remained attached to the properties.

The current owner of Lot O, Daniel C. Cotton, initiated the court action in an attempt to invalidate the easement. Cotton filed suit against the town and two owners of other parcels at the Point for opposing his effort to invalidate the easement. In a telephone interview, Cotton said he had allowed the deadline for filing an appeal to expire without taking any further action.

The dispute over the Point began on Dec. 15, 1998, when Cotton asked the selectmen to allow him to remove the easement. Cotton said he wanted to remove the restrictions to "clear" the property for his heirs. The selectmen rejected Cotton's request by a 4-1 vote. At the Dec. 15 meeting, Cotton threatened to seek to overturn the easement in court. In January 2000, he followed through on his threat and sought relief in the Norfolk County Land Court.

"Although intangible, the benefited parcel owners are exercising an affirmative right each time they enjoy the view over Lot O."
— Justice Leon J. Lombardi

Michael and Mary Sullivan and Keith G. Moskow opposed Cotton's proposal to remove the easement. As owners of property on the Point, both Moskow and the Sullivans claimed they were beneficiaries of the easement and entitled to an unobstructed ocean view. The easement also granted the town the right to an unobstructed view across the Point.

In the court case, Cotton claimed the easement was invalidated by the so-called "sunset provision" in a 1960 state law, the Restrictions Statute, which invalidated certain deed restrictions after 50 years if not renewed. Neither the town nor any of the abutters renewed the deed restrictions within the time period established by the law. Lawyers for the town claimed a provision in the law exempted municipalities from the "sunset provision." According to the town, it had the right to treat the parcel as conservation land. The Sullivans claimed that the restriction was part of a common scheme implemented by Gammons to benefit all of the land he used to own around the Point. Moskow claimed that the deed restriction actually constituted an "affirmative easement of view" and did not fall under the jurisdiction of the Restrictions Statute.

Lombardi agreed with Moskow, ruling that the restriction constituted a positive easement and did not fall under the jurisdiction of the Restrictions Statute. Moskow declined to comment on the outcome of the court case. According to Lombardi's written opinion, several cases support the concept of a positive easement even if the language in the deed is restrictive in nature.

"Rather than merely prohibiting the owner of Lot O from developing the land, the 1926 imposition gave the owners of the benefited parcels (including, but not limited to, the Moskow property, the Sullivan property, and the Cohasset property) the right to have an unobstructed view across Lot O," Lombardi wrote in his opinion. "Although intangible, the benefited parcel owners are exercising an affirmative right each time they enjoy the view over Lot O."

Lombardi did not render a decision on the town's assertion that it was exempt from the "sunset provision" of the Restrictions Statute. Because he dismissed the case on a separate matter of law, Lombardi said he did not have to address the question of whether the town is exempt from the "sunset provision."

AROUND TOWN

BRASS ENSEMBLE

The South Shore Conservatory's Honors Brass Ensemble performed at the 46th annual All-State Concert and In-Service Conference at the Sheraton Ferncroft in Danvers. Shown here are Colin Shepherd of Scituate, Elizabeth Hassan of Cohasset, Peter Ajemian of Duxbury, Lisa Wolk of Kingston and Ed Perry (seated) of East Bridgewater.

POLICE VEHICLE

This is the Chevy Blazer that the military donated to the Cohasset police which the police department would like to refurbish.

ON STAGE

Congratulations to Cohasset's Miranda Lanzillotti, a seventh-grader at the Thayer Middle School, on her performance in "Something's Rotten in the State of Denmark," a loosely-based version of Shakespeare's "Hamlet," on March 1 at Thompson Hall at the school.

ARTS AROUND BOSTON

Local artists JoAnne Chittick, Jeanne L. Replogle and Jack Nash are taking part in ArtsAround Boston, a juried exhibition sponsored by Boston Magazine.

The exhibition is being held in the Charlestown Navy Yard's Preble Room Gallery near the USS Constitution from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. through April 16.

The purpose of the exhibition is to showcase the quality and variety of art being produced in the New England area. The show features more than 70 works selected from more than 400 entries.

THANK YOU, GEORGE!

A big thank you to George Roukounakis, owner of the Texaco station in the village, for helping the CHS class of 2000 raise almost $2,000 for its treasury.

George allowed the seniors to conduct car washes at his station. Thanks also to all those who have made donations to the senior class. Your help is very much appreciated and thanks again, George.

SPECIAL VISIT

Have you see Vee and Arthur Roebuck of Beechwood Street smiling more than usual? Well, there's a really good reason. Their granddaughter, Alexandra Roebuck Jones, has been visiting. She has been visiting the town hall and all around with Grandmum. The best news is that Alexandra will be moving from San Diego to Maryland this summer.

CIRCUS ATMOSPHERE

Saturday morning was wild on the town common! In addition to the town election that included the override vote, local state candidates along with their campaign workers were out in force in an effort to become familiar with Cohasset voters! We saw Ted LeClair and Jim Cantwell who will vie for the Democratic nomination for the Plymouth-Norfolk senatorial district seat held by Republican Bob Hedlund.

Then there were Michael Holden and Garrett Bradley, who will face each other in the Democratic state primary for our state representative's seat. We also saw Republican Mary Anne McKenna out there campaigning. She will challenge Maureen Devine in the fall for the Republican nomination. The winners of the Democratic and Republican primaries will then challenge each other for Mary Jeanette Murray's seat.

In addition to all the campaign and election excitement, the MS Walk and ASP yard sale were being held.

The weather was superb making it a great day for all the happenings.

CONGO CAPERS

Mark you calendars now for 'Congo Capers 2000,' to be presented by the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset. The Broadway musical review will be on stage at 8 p.m., May 5-6 at Cohasset High. Donations are $10. Call 383-0345 for tickets. For ten ore more people, tickets are $8 and can be ordered by calling 331-8119. The show is directed and choreographed by JoAnn Fichtner.

BLAZER FUND

Can you help out by contributing to the police Blazer fund? The police department has raised $3,000 to refurbish the four-wheel-drive vehicle but needs about $2,500 more to accomplish the task. The military gave the 1985 Chevy Blazer with 28,000 original miles to the police at no cost to taxpayers. The town has no funding available to have the vehicle painted and equipped as a "Special Operations Vehicle." Donations may be sent to the Cohasset Police Department, 62 Elm St., attn. Blazer Fund.

Police Chief Brian Noonan says that when a storm hits some parts of town become inaccessible to regular police cruisers due to hazardous road and weather conditions so the Special Operations Vehicle would be a real asset to the department.

Do you have any news to share with Around Town? Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. You can also send us items by fax at 741-2931 or by e-mail at mford@cnc.com. Let us hear from you! Thanks, Mary Ford
